President King's Work Outside of Oberlin

IT is well known that President King gives first place to his administrative and teaching work at home. But he is in constant demand outside of Oberlin. He is recognized in educational and religious circles as a man with a clear and helpful message which thoughtful people everywhere are eager to hear. He is an intelligently progressive leader, and as such is honored and trusted and has a strong influence far beyond the Oberlin constituency.

In the National Education Association he was on the Committee of Ten on Secondary School Studies. Among recent appointments have been addresses before the North Central Association of Colleges and the Conference of the Colleges of the Interior. He is one of the Ohio Committee on the Cecil Rhodes Scholarships.

At national gatherings of Congregationalists he is a frequent speaker. He is to address the coming October meetings of the Triennial National Council and the American Board.

Courses of lectures at Harvard, Northwestern and Chicago Universities extend his acquaintance and influence. His books, Reconstruction in Theology and Theology and the Social Consciousness have given him a conspicuous place among American theological leaders. The most recent testimony to the position which he holds as a religious teacher is his appointment (with Professor Peabody of Harvard) as one of the two speakers who represent the United States in the department of Religion at the International Congress of Arts and Sciences to be held in connection with the St. Louis Exposition.

In the application of religion to daily life President King is especially helpful. The great Training Class which he has led on Sunday mornings in Oberlin for the past nineteen years is always a point of attraction to visitors. In the Boston Congregationalist he conducts the very practical department called the Professor's Chair. At Northwestern University the coming summer he gives a ten days' course of lectures on Psychology's Hints for Life.

At Young Men's Christian Conventions and Conferences he has made various addresses which have been published by the International Committee and are widely circulated.

He is a member of the Executive Board of the Religious Education Association. He was active in organizing this new and important movement and his address at its first convention was one of great power.

It is possible for President King to respond to only a small fraction of the requests which he receives. But so far as consistent with his duties at home these outside invitations are accepted as a part of that larger service which the College can render outside the circle of its own students.

Alice H. Luce

INTO the life of every institution, there come, often at times of peculiar need, a few strong personalities, fit, above all, to cope with the existing difficulties and to infuse into everything a fresher vigor. Such an influence, dominating, refreshing, and broadening, cannot fail to have a deep impress upon the lives so fortunate as to receive it and to perpetuate its power both in results that are obvious and in those that lie deep in grateful memories.

In the four years that Alice Hanson Luce has been a part of Oberlin life, the place she has filled has been an important one, and in a sense unique. For the broader outlook brought from the outside stimulates and renews. Not by the women of the institution alone who have felt more directly her influence, but by all, the peculiar gift she was so eminently fitted and willing to give, is appreciated. Miss Luce by her position as Dean of the Women's Department, her endowments and personality has given much to our life, much that must remain because of the progress it stands for.

The masterly ability shown in her administration is of an unusual order and the work accomplished in representing Oberlin to the outside world is important and lasting.

In her class room especially, has Miss Luce's charm of personality and splendid force of intellect been felt. It is given to some to perform that service of all the most enviable—that of opening to another's vision a new and larger world—and some are so fortunate as to receive it. Those who through such a teacher have learned to know and love the English classics cannot but feel a sense of personal obligation for service so graciously rendered.

To the school in Germany of which Miss Luce is to be the Principal and which has lain near her heart so long, she will bring all the force and sweep of intellect that Oberlin has been so fortunate in knowing.

The Willard School for American Girls, situated in Berlin, will give training in the modern languages, in art, music, literature and history, aside from the advantages it offers as a cultivated German home. For this position Miss Luce is certainly eminently fitted, as she will bring to it the best both of American colleges for women and German universities, having taken her A. B. degree from Wellesley, her Ph. D. degree from Heidelberg University, and having had connections as a teacher with Wellesley and Smith Colleges.

In losing Miss Luce, necessarily there must be much regret; but ignoring our own personal feeling, there remains the sincere wish for the fullest attainment of her ideals and their realization in a foreign land even as here.

DEAN LUCE.

Professor Miller

EDWARD ALANSON MILLER, Professor of Pedagogy and Dean of the College Men, was born in Buda, Illinois, on the nineteenth of May, eighteen hundred and sixty-six.

He received his early education in the public schools of his native town. In 1882 he entered Oberlin Academy, graduating in 1885, and the next fall entered the College as a Freshman. He remained with his class till the spring of 1888, when he left school to go to California.

From this time until 1893 he was engaged in business, holding positions with the Illinois Steel Company of Chicago and the C. L. S. & E. Railroad. In 1894-5 he was principal of the La Moille, Illinois, High School.

In the fall of 1896 Mr. Miller came again to Oberlin and graduated from the College with the class of 1897. He served as Superintendent of Schools in Webster, S. D. From 1900-1903 he held the important position of Superintendent of Schools in Oberlin, and in the spring of 1903 was appointed Professor of Pedagogy and Dean of the Men in the College.

To his new work, then, Professor Miller brings a large and varied experience both along business and educational lines. Though we have had him with us less than a year, he has already won a firm place in the hearts of the men of the College, which the intense interest, that, as an old athlete, he has taken in our inter-collegiate sports, is strengthening daily.

And today, all who come in contact with him either as Dean or teacher feel that he is a man whose interests are their interests and to whom they can always turn, as a friendly and sympathetic adviser.

REV. CHARLES HENRY CHURCHILL.

Reminiscences of Charles Henry Churchill

By His Son Alfred

THE modern educator dreams of a life which shall bring the body, the intellect, the emotions and the will into harmonious action. Such was my father's boyhood. His home was an ample farm with a pebbly brook, where the boy built a dam and a water-mill (with a trip-hammer attachment and came within a hair of being "apprenticed" to a mill-wright in consequence). In the village was a long hill with a full half mile of straight coasting in winter. (Does not that make an Oberlin boy's mouth water?) Near by was the Connecticut River,—he built his own sail boat and could sail back and forth from his home to Meriden Academy or to Dartmouth; and there were endless woods and trapping and hunting and swimming, horses, cows, sheep, dogs, squirrels, birds and snakes.

But the social aspects of life were not less favorable. The little New Hampshire town was a microcosm containing souls of every degree of magnitude and meanness. There is a story of epic breadth about the boy's father.

A heavy boat was to be raised. There were four strong men to do the work, and they placed their shoulders to the hulk. At the critical instant they were seized with panic, feeling the boat about to fall on them. Three gave back to escape black death, but one stayed to the task. "Come on," he groaned and bore the weight alone. Back, from pure shame, rushed the three, and the boat was heaved into place; but grandfather's arm was broken.

If that story had been told by Plutarch it might have been a favorite with boys in every land.

Sunday was a great day on the farm. The neighbors came for miles around to the village church and heard good sermons of a length that no modern congregation could tolerate. The close of the morning service saw a gathering of leading spirits at grandfather's house to dinner, and theology and slavery were leading courses. Thus the children got to know the brightest men and women in that part of the world.

On winter nights while the boy whittled, or drew, or modeled heads (in spruce gum) in front of the big fire place, his mother used to stretch his imagination by telling him stories or reading grand passages of poetry—Homer or Byron. Think of those long winter nights with the roaring fire and poetry and pleasant converse, and with nuts and cider and roasted apples to fill the pauses and the healthy young stomachs!

The teacher of the village school was a remarkable woman. We have other testimony than the affectionately prejudiced verdict of Charles Henry. She it was who taught the boy to read music and started him in mathematics (which he disliked!) in reading and writing and drawing; and he helped her to whip a big lout who questioned her authority in the school-room. To be specific, he held while she whaled.

Before Henry was ten years old he was singing soprano in the village choir. At twelve he played the violoncello in the little church orchestra. He was always familiar with all the common scales and keys. When his voice began to get lower he sang alto and then tenor, but he played bass. By and by his increasing skill enabled him to play two parts (part of the time) and sing another.

Of course the musical art of the time was simple. It was not quite like trying this feat with Bach or Brahms (nor even Buck!). It probably seemed a pity to the boy that the human larynx was not so arranged as to enable him to get in the fourth part.

On week days he had to get up before daylight and milk, drive plough, plant and reap. He was compactly knit, and at an early age was strong as a man grown. He had to take his place and swing his scythe in the lines of mowers, or bear a part in work on the public road. He has said that some of this was unwise and that his strength was presumed on. But he was not too tired at close of day to play football, and then to swim, row, jump or wrestle until bedtime.

With his splendid physical strength Henry Churchill combined a deep-rooted contempt of cruelty, injustice and meanness. The lad was "a bonnie fighter," particularly when the cause of war was some case of boy's inhumanity to boy.

After a while Henry grew up and went to Dartmouth. He played football and broadened the old straight classical curriculum for himself by taking French from a native refugee.

He was full of humor and merry pranks. The fellows sometimes went to sleep in Latin (five o'clock of a winter morning—no wonder) and one lazy giant depended on his companions to wake him and point him the passage in Virgil, in case he was called on. After Charles Henry had been used for this service until he reflected that in youth much dependence on others might result in harm to the character, he bided his time. There was a very slow fellow in the class, who construed with long, awkward pauses between the lines. Waiting for a favorable instant, Henry suddenly waked the giant and pointed the passage. His success was perfect. The big man got to his feet and began to construe, to the astonishment and delight of the boys.

The year '49 found, studying Theology in Oberlin, a very serious young man indeed who had many communions with himself and his Maker, whether or not it might be his privilege and duty to preach the Gospel. In early manhood father lost his beloved wife, Mary Jane Turner, who left him three children. When later on he married Henrietta Vance, she took the family to her heart like her own and became a loving mother to all alike (the children always had to think twice before they could tell to which family they belonged). A remarkable story of her early married life was told me by my mother.

They had been married a little over a year when my father took the young bride for a little journey back to his own home to show her to his people. They were riding in the day-car with three, or possibly four, children (there were three of the older family, at the time, besides a new little one), when they noticed a small red spot on father's sleeve, a stain from the chemical laboratory. He was accustomed to carry a little phial of strong ammonia in his vest pocket for the purpose of removing such spots. So taking out the phial, with some difficulty, having a child on either knee, he asked the young mother to remove the stopper. She had no sooner done so than the whole contents of the phial heated by his body shot up directly into his eyes. In awful agony, he groped his way back to the water fountain, washed his eyes out as best he could, and kept on bathing them without ceasing until the next station was reached. Then the pathetic little family disembarked onto the platform of a strange station to search for a physician, the man completely blind, in intense pain, with his head bound up in wet cloths, carrying a child and led by his wife with the other children. A good doctor was at length found, who did whatever he could for the patient, and told him that he had his presence of mind and his prompt and free use of water to thank if he ever recovered the use of his eyes, which was indeed doubtful. (As a matter of fact, he was blind for some weeks but at length recovered completely).

There was one incident connected with this painful experience which transfigured it, and which the young wife treasured in her heart as affording a glimpse into her husband's inner life. It was something that he said to her on that endless walk trying to find help in an unknown place. The words which came out of that black night and pain were these: "Perhaps this is God's hand, and now I shall preach the Gospel." Mother wept as she told it.

The years flew by. There was a quiver full of children. The only way to bring them up on the modest income available was to get a big lot and let them run. The home acre was like a small farm. We all had to work. We didn't like it, but we had great fun just the same.

The principal family gathering was Sunday afternoons, and music was its chief inspiration. Most every one played something, and every mouth sang (except those which happened to be full of wind instruments). Father presided at the organ. At one time there were quite a number of instruments and voices in the family proper, to say nothing of a conservatory girl or two, or other students, of whom generally there were several under the home roof.

Father and mother could not give money to help poor girls, but such as they had they gave to them. Both were full of chivalrous love. They would have risked their own reputation or welfare at any time to shield or help the weak, of any age or race. At different times they made a home for two women of the negro race (two of the best scholars my father ever had, by the way). Both went out to do noble work for their people, and one anticipated the motive and method of some of Booker T. Washington's work by nearly a quarter of a century.

I do not desire to leave the impression that there was nothing remarkable about this home music except the remarkable lot of pleasure it gave us, the sense of fellowship, and the spiritual uplift. Incidentally, the practice of singing—soprano at first, and later, alto, tenor and bass, was a good preparation for learning to hear all the parts at once in polyphonic music, and subsequent appreciation of masterpieces.

This was a full rich life. There was really no end to the man's ceaseless activities. Before the telephone was generally known he got permission to construct specimens for educational purposes and had a practical line running between his laboratory and the house. Similarly he made a phonograph. He lectured on art, especially architecture, and as slides were not available he made India ink drawings, hundreds of them, large enough to show in a large class-room. He gave his art courses in Philadelphia and elsewhere. Earlier, when good music was too expensive, he had made a font of wooden type and printed his own music for the choir. That he made the first pipe organ in Oberlin is a matter of history, but that he and an older son planned and built a beautiful baby carriage, big enough for two babies at once, was a matter of much more consequence to the growing family, where money was scarce. He wrote a text book and made the drawings and cut the wood blocks for the plates. He conducted teachers' institutes without number, and college summer schools (which were held in winter), and filled pulpits in distant towns years on end, and began a translation of the New Testament, which, greatly as he admired the matchless King James, he felt should be familiar to us in the simplest and most dignified of modern English.

And these things after all are sporadic instances.

That such extended activities took place at the expense of extraordinary achievement in any single line of effort was a matter of course. But he regarded this as God's purpose. The Oberlin of his day had need of every one of his gifts, and he gave freely. The days of specialization had not arrived.

It has been said that the exuberant vitality of this life was akin to the Greek. It does undoubtedly recall the antique energy, or perhaps the Renaissance with some of the darker notes left out. Other traits, characteristically Christian rather than Greek, have been suggested sufficiently for the purpose of this brief sketch.

It would not be pleasing to my father, who never loved flattery, that I should leave the impression that he was a man of perfect character. It would only be discouraging, and it would be untrue. His intellect and even his vitality had their limitations. And he was a very human man, with human failings.

But he had a wonderful, loving heart.

To the Class of 1904

Oh, the lives that touch each other
For so brief a space!
Tarrying in the morning cloudland,
Must so soon give place.

For the brightness and the glory
Of the next succeeds the last:
Hardly pausing for the handclasp
And the farewell, they are past.

But a brightness still remaining
Those that come shall know,
For it shines upon them, streaming
Far, from those that go.

THE CLASS OF 1905.

The Pride of the Faculty

WE are a great class, sure enough—even the Sophomores admit that, and the faculty say they never have seen our equal. The enormous increase in the number of enrolled students since our Freshman year proves that we are the best advertisement the college ever had.

We have been making history for a great many years—ever since Alexander Dick entered the Junior Academy class in '98. He is our oldest member, but the hand of Time has rested lightly on his head and he is still as bright and fair as he used to be.

In nineteen hundred and one we entered upon a year which will never be forgotten. We were the largest Freshman class in the history of the college, and we knew it. We had so much class spirit that even in the necessary absence of our president, Mr. Keller, we were undaunted, and when the mist raised the morning after the last great battle, we knew the victory was ours—there was no one else to claim it, for the Sophomores had retreated.

It took the faculty just one year to discover how reliable and influential we were, and in our Sophomore year we were christened "The Pride of the Faculty." This name has a great significance. It has been the cause of the abolishment of barbarous customs and the establishment of high ideals. We conformed to the wishes of the faculty in adopting a new mode of entertaining the Freshmen, and now the annual pig roast takes the place of the brutish class scrap.

There is one blot on our Sophomore history, however, which even time will not erase. "The 'forcible' detention of the Freshman president from the Thanksgiving party" was a heinous offense—an act which the class as a whole could not sanction. Miss Penfield, ex-'05, made her memory sacred by her intense devotion to law and order and her vehement campaign against the bandits of the class. Her resolutions to '06 may be read in the '04 annual.

The numerous attempts of the Freshmen to stir up petty quarrels reacted upon their own heads. Ross remained in the basement of Sturges Hall for an hour without a single guard. He was hysterical when found.

The Lord Cottage girls say that they have a vivid picture of Lester Taylor's flying coat-tails disappearing around the corner of Forest and South Professor streets. More than once he transformed his room into a fortress, barricading the door with a washstand, three trunks, and a bureau, and arming himself from head to foot with a tennis racket and an ink well, lest at any time he might be assailed by his wily foes.

Our Junior year has been a quiet but not an unremarkable one. We have been busily engaged in philosophical research and deep thinking, and in Psychology we have made an unparalleled record. It is a fact that when Bellows asked Professor MacLennan to sign his schedule for Introduction to Philosophy as an elective, the astonished philosopher, after some hesitation, thundered: "Yes, Slats, I'll sign your card; but if you flunk the course I'll break your neck."

To be sure, we have been brought this year to look more than ever before on the serious side of life. Bereavements are bound to come, even in one's college experience, and this year we have been sadly stricken by the loss of two time-honored and revered classmates, Mr. Sturges and Mr. Shurtz. The absence of Mr. Sturges at class meetings cast a gloom over the whole assembly, so that now our president forbears calling for "remarks upon the pending motion," because of the fond memories and tears it would call forth. Mr. Shurtz became a member of the Senior class because he didn't want to play football another season, but he still cherishes a tender regard for '05—he wears our pin and attends our class parties when sufficiently urged.

In our ambition to become Aristotles and Platos we have not entirely forgotten Epicurus. We have let pleasure be our secondary aim. Thanks to leap year traditions; the girls have had a long coveted opportunity to show their appreciation of the constant and gallant attentions that have been showered upon them by the chivalrous knights of the black and gold.

Such is our history. We have been a distinguished class all through our course; we intend to be more distinguished than ever next year. We have been dignified always, even as our class motto is dignified. We have been loyal to our class. Who else would be?

What is in store for us as Seniors we hardly dare to predict. But we have a firm and unfaltering trust that we shall receive the reward of the faithful. When we make our petitions for Senior week and permission for a class play, the faculty will not be oblivious of our devotion to the high ideals they have set before us, nor will they fail to show their appreciation to us, who have been—

First in war, first in peace, and first in the pride of the faculty.

THE CLASS OF 1906.

Sophomore History

THIS year has proved a very important one for us as a class, since it has afforded us an opportunity to show, to some extent at least, what we can accomplish. We have been able to devote almost our entire time to the fulfillment of our own ends, as the Freshmen from the first exhibited nothing to indicate that they were worthy of any serious consideration. They held a mass meeting at their first opportunity and voted "No scrap." Seeing that they were not going to have a very auspicious beginning, we entertained them at a pig-roast. They brought with them the proverbial small boy's appetite and finally the pig had to be spirited away to prevent the youngsters from injuring themselves by over-eating. That they won the tug-o'-war (by means of a knotted rope) is a fact that will undoubtedly live forever in the annals of '07; but they were most generous, for children, and did not take to themselves all the honors, for in six consecutive wrestling matches a stalwart Soph. came down with a thud upon a pig-stuffed Freshman. The Freshmen took these defeats quite manfully and the time-worn expression, "'06 is on the hog," originated on this occasion. The Freshmen made but one poor attempt to become famous, but the cold world gave them one pitying smile and passed on its way.

We celebrated the opening of our Sophomore year with a grand parade, accompanied by special songs and a fine display of fireworks, all of which the Freshmen vigorously applauded (from their bed-room windows).

In athletics we have not been altogether inactive. Our football team had unusually keen competition, and owing to the loss of a number of our best men to the 'Varsity, we had to be content with second place.

Capt. Staub's "Championship Basket-ball Team" (to use his own words) had an off season. It took them some time to realize that they were among the "also rans," but after being completely snowed under several times, the fact seemed to dawn on them, and the defeat of our football team at the hands of the sportsmanlike (?) Seniors, was amply avenged.

Capt. Lightner led his team through six consecutive victories to an absolutely complete claim to the championship.

But our attention has not been confined entirely to athletics. First place in the Oratorical Contest and a splendid representation in debate would indicate that the higher things claim their share of attention.

Our class stunt, that we consider of some real merit, is the adoption by the men of corduroy trousers as a class distinction. These have a real practical value aside from being genuinely "artistic." In this connection we might record the addition to our ranks of a number of unfortunate upper-classmen. They were duly fitted out with the distinction and welcomed into our class life.

In the past we have been rather careful about pushing ourselves forward in any 'unseemly manner, feeling that the Senior rights should be respected, but since they have utterly failed to take any advantage of their opportunities, we have determined to hold back no longer, and in the future you may look for much from the class of '06.

THE CLASS OF 1907.

History of 1907

I. PLANTING OF THE COLONY.—There is in the northern part of Ohio a community, famed far and wide for its brilliant achievements and its high moral character, in which there is a strange system of regulating the inhabitants. In the spring of each year the aged and decrepit ones are cast out of the land and are left to find a home elsewhere or die in their wanderings, while each fall a young and vigorous colony fills the vacant place. The new colony admitted in the autumn of the year 1903 was the most promising ever received and was early destined to make its mark on the pages of the country's history.

Their beginning was propitious; indeed, it was evident from the first that the favor of the gods rested upon them, for the day, usually set apart by the superior beings as a fitting time to pour out their wrath by the tubful upon innocent mortals, was unexpectedly clear and bright. The process of naturalization having been soon effected, the colony was established with a tall, stalwart, black-haired youth at its head. The older inhabitants of the place, together with the head of the nation and all the ruling body, seemed, with but one exception, favorably disposed toward the latest acquisition to their number, whom the Sophomores, so-called because of their assumed appearance of wisdom, immediately dubbed Freshmen, in contempt.

II. THE WAR OF 1903.—Hostilities commenced at once. Small skirmishes occurred from time to time, and rumors of war spread throughout the land. Finally an open battle occurred. In the tug-of-war, preceded by the offering of a sacrifice of roast pig to the gods, the Freshmen proved themselves superior in strength to their enemies. This was the first outbreak of what was destined to be a long and tedious struggle. As an instance of the petty treachery engaged in by the enemy, the Sophomores, while the newly-elected Freshman chief was holding a levee, placed sulphur in the furnace of the hall and the new colony was only saved from death by sneezing, by the bravery of its prominent men.

The next severe outbreak occurred within the very temple itself. The Sophomores, boastful by nature—a quality much deplored by Freshmen—circulated photographs celebrating a victory over their enemies, an occurrence which was naturally humiliating to a proud and strong people. Strategy was decided upon by the insulted colony. A few days later dire forebodings filled the air and the general feeling of approaching disaster was augmented by mysterious announcements placed in the temple. The war cloud broke, when, upon their leaving the temple, a huge hog with flying colors—those of the Sophomores, of course—made its way slowly and majestically through the excited crowd. The enemy, appreciating the insult, opened fire and a hot but brief battle ensued—brief, because interrupted by the chief ruler of the land, whose opposition to war-like measures is well known.

A few days later a peace conference was called, at which the head of the nation presided. A treaty was finally drawn up, agreeable to both sides because of the double meaning of its fundamental clause: "Them things what you say I are, you be." Under the terms of this treaty peace has been preserved up to the present time, though from time to time there have been slight evidences of unfriendly feeling, as in the effort of the Sophomores to ruin the Freshman skating carnival, which resulted most fortunately for the younger colony. To the Freshmen, without doubt, belong the laurels of victory in this long and severe struggle.

III. MANNER AND CUSTOMS.—Like all nations the inhabitants of this community have some peculiar customs. The battle cry, one of the oddest of these, is, in the case of the Freshman colony, Chinese, chosen in deference to one of the many nations represented in the land. But perhaps the most important custom is the so-called stunt, the colony distinction. It is the inalienable right and a primal duty of each colony to march into the temple once during the year wearing some strange article for the purpose of emphasizing its individuality. This particular Freshman colony appeared in the temple one morning in the midst of the hymn, "There's a wideness in God's mercy," wearing the mark of distinction, a gray cap with a crimson F upon it.

F means Fool, the Sophomores claim.

But what do Sophomores know of it?

For F can also stand for Fame,

And does, you may be sure of it.

IV. SOCIAL LIFE OF THE PEOPLE.—In its social life also this youngest colony has been especially favored by the gods. Receptions and entertainments of varied degrees of originality were given them by the older inhabitants or were enjoyed among themselves. Many were characterized by the ever-present name-tag and many miles of marching, a pastime well-suited to such vigorous people. One affair of the year, which transcended all the rest in its originality, was the leap year party, an occasion long to be remembered particularly by the feminine half of the colony, who still see visions of languid youths reclining in cosy corners, waiting to be entertained by the sprightly conversation of their hostesses. Such is the story of the social life of the colony, a people well-trained in social graces, fond of the gayer side of life, and delighting in the companionship of congenial spirits as they have proved to be.

V. SPORTS.—Eager alike at war and at play, the Freshmen, though not always successful contestants in football, basket ball and in all the various pastimes of the colonies, have nevertheless acquitted themselves nobly and with truly valorous spirit. Many times have they won the crown of victory and always in victory and in defeat they have shown themselves men, brave and stalwart.

VI. OCCUPATION.—Thus far the principal reason for the existence of this colony of people has not been mentioned. Their chief occupation is menticulture. Though as yet they are in a comparatively low state of civilization, the conditions under which they labor are particularly well-suited to rapid growth. The soil is fertile, the farmers are industrious, the work is faithful and already the colony has excelled in its crops. All these facts furnish ample evidence to any thoughtful observer of industrial conditions that a bright future is opening out before this enterprising and intelligent people. May the gods continue to favor and bless them as they have in the past and may their future achievements bring only honor upon the nation of which they are for the time being a part.

The Book of Dreams of the Dreamer

CHAPTER I.

1. In the second year of Increase, Dean of the land of Visions, came Juniors from the land of Ham and Hay unto the Patience of the Faculty and besieged it.
2. And there werè many brethren of the Juniors and they laid siege unto Patience and digged a ditch round about it and threw up a wall against it.
3. And on the ninth month, the month Tishri, the twenty-third day of the month began they to dig beneath the walls of the patience of Bewer, the chief magician of the Faculty. And they planted beneath the wall Hebrew roots.
4. And in the month Marcheshvan at the noise of the voice of Roberts the walls fell. Now Roberts was a Middler.
5. And in the month Nisan on the twelfth day of the month I, the Dreamer, dreamed a dream and behold I saw Bryant walking and lo he was not with one of the daughters of Luce.
6. And in my dream I saw and behold some doing "stunts." And I enquired and behold they were of the tribe of Yung Bois and knew no better. And lo, one had a bottle upon which he made music.
7. And in my visions behold I saw one Kirker and in his hands two loaves—and he was awake.
8. And I beheld Corbett with his "married look" and Tubbs with his hair cut, and lo they rejoiced exceedingly and cried out saying, "The Germans and the Dutch they don't amount to much!"

CHAPTER II.

1. And I awoke and behold there stood before me one speaking. And his countenance was like unto McCall. And he said unto me:
2. Harken to me, son of sleep, not for what I say, but because of what I have unsaid.
3. And I saw—walking on the walls of a city one long and lank in the form of an inhabitant of the land of Ire.
4. And his feet were like unto snow ploughs and his hair was in the form of a broom. And his name was "Mother."
5. And he cried with a loud voice, saying, "Less noise!" And he carried a Reed in his right hand.
6. And one of the tribe, an armour bearer, took unto himself two of the daughters of college, Princesses of renown.
7. And there was a great slaughter, lo, of many thousand rules. And his name was McCarthy.
8. And behold, one "Mort," chief of those from the land of Seniors, was on that day summoned unto the inner court of the King. And he was there on time!

9. And there were giants in those days.
10. And one Kil Bun, of the tribe of Kneehites, took unto himself a wife by lot. And she was five cubits high.
11. And she cried unto him and said, "Arise, my lord, and kindle the fire upon the family altar," and he said unto her, "Go there yourself."
12. In those days there was one Sprunger asleep in the inner court of the King. And he had a book.
13. And behold, the leaves of the book were uncut. And the King smote him hip and thigh because of the book and because of the leaves for that they were uncut.
14. And he had a black and blue spot.
15. And on an appointed day Meeker and Jones assayed to instruct the King. And they were slain.

CHAPTER III.

1. And lo, I slept. And I saw in the visions of my head upon my bed and behold the Palace of the land of Visions.
2. And it was swept and garnished.
3. And the servants of the Bord of Helth took from the Palace fourteen chariots full of the soil of the land and much spoil.
4. In that day it shone with the brightness of the noonday sun.
5. And behold, there was no more sickness and the air was pure.
6. The gates of the palace also no longer creaked on their hinges. Verily, they could Swing easily because the Palace was clean.
7. And I awoke!

The Conservatory

A wonderful castle there is in our midst,
And its magic is known thro' the land;
And dear are its towers and battlements gray,
That lofty and beautiful stand.

The castle is full of wonderful sights,
Of witching and magical sound,
For music is heard from morning till eve
Enchanting the country around.

There masters their knowledge and skill do impart
Of an art, absorbing and long,
There beautiful maidens like sirens of old
Enchain us with playing and song.

Oh, fair is the castle that is in our midst,
Whose music is famed thro' the land,
And dear are its towers and battlements gray,
That lofty and beautiful stand.

Professor Rice

Soon after the death of Professor Rice, which occurred October twenty-sixth, 1901, the wish that a portrait bust of him be made to adorn Warner Hall became general among the faculty and students of the Conservatory. Words cannot express the appropriateness of having this bust or the satisfaction we take in the fact that it has enabled over twelve hundred students, teachers, and friends to be represented in this artistic memorial of a noble life. The bust was made by Mr. Spicer-Simson, an English sculptor residing in Paris. It was exhibited in the French Salon the past season where it received the highest commendation from the thousands of strangers and critics who saw it there, as a work of art. But for us who knew the man, it will be far more than a mere work of art. It will be a constant reminder of his strenuous devotion to the cause of music, his steadfast character, his generous friendships, and may it serve to keep his memory fresh down the long lines of incoming generations of students.

The New Organ

The organ placed in the Concert Hall this year comes from the residence of the late Mr. W. S. Kimball, of Rochester, N. Y., and is partly donated by and partly purchased from his son, Mr. Harold C. Kimball. It was built by Hildebrand Roosevelt, of New York, and rebuilt by Viner & Son, of Buffalo. The decorations were executed and designed by Weber, Lind & Hall, of Cleveland.

It is a three manual organ of the largest size, and is fitted with all the mechanical accessories of the modern organ. It has the utmost refinement of tone, and with its imposing appearance and richness of coloring, gives just the one element that has been lacking in the Concert Hall.

Until somewhat recently the men of the Conservatory have had very little of what constitutes real student life, nor had any attempt been made to better this condition, at least none that had had any permanent effect. It was impossible for the men of the Conservatory to bear a legitimate and systematic part in any plans of this institution of which they are a small division; there was no provision by which they might assist in any of the social functions, aid new students, or help in other ways, and there was really no reason why the old students should feel at all drawn together by anything like class spirit.

But in the spring term of 1903 steps were taken to mitigate somewhat this state of affairs. At the suggestion of Mrs. Woodford, a Men's Board of the Conservatory was organized in May, somewhat on the plan of the Women's Board. It consisted of seven members—four officers, president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, and an Advisory Committee of three members. Since then some changes have been made, but the constitution remains substantially as at first.

This Board is to aid the new students in this department, to bear an honorably prominent part in assisting at any of the social events wherein the men are concerned, to have power to call meetings of the men to levy any of those taxes so dear to the college heart and so sincere a voucher of the fact that one is a part of some important organization. In short, the Board is to carry on all the business of the men's department of the Conservatory and to draw the students closer together.

In close connection with this is the literary society, of great value in broadening the life of the men, and if not stopped by the amount of work pressing on its members, will undoubtedly do even more good than it has accomplished in the past.

In no department of the College is there so noticeably a lack of class spirit, and so much of what might be called isolation among its students. This is partly unavoidable, because of the absence of many classes, and the very few members that, for the most part, constitute those that do exist. Even then the nature of the work forbids much of acquaintanceship. But the conditions may be greatly improved and as a step towards this, the idea of a Men's Board should meet with the earnest support of all. Its work although slow, if loyally upheld, cannot but be beneficial.

The Cads are curious little boys,
Their fun consists in making noise,
And only thus they find their joys,
They are such curious little boys.

A kingdom there lies in this country
Happy and fair to behold,
And gracious the laws that obtain there
As a tale of chivalry told.
It's ruler sways reverent subjects,
Has each at his call and his beck;
For who would not serve in a kingdom
Whose monarch is John Fisher Peck?

Class History

THE light in Room 13 was almost too dim to pretend to study any longer and as I looked around the darkening room, I saw that the last straggler had picked up his books and departed, and I was alone. As I was preparing to do the same, my attention was arrested by a queer rasping voice that seemed to come from thin air and somewhat startled, I sank back into my secluded corner with listening ears. It may have been my recent study of the wandering Æneas influenced my behaviour, however my hair did not rise nor did my voice stick in my throat as was that pious hero's custom. A voice it certainly was, but muffled and with an odd woodeny accent.

"Thank goodness! this day's over," cried the voice and one of the seats across the aisle creaked a little, "My back is tired enough to split into kindling."

At this moment there came into my head something that had been said that day about the many tales out of school, the class room benches might tell, and what luck that I should be the one to overhear them. With a disgraceful lack of shame at my eavesdropping, I settled myself to listen.

The first voice had died away into grumbling silence, when one of the benches, giving itself a preparatory jolt, remarked:

"Somebody knocked a bolt loose in my left leg to-day. I'd have lost my temper and shut up if it hadn't been a girl. She was excited about some skating party or other her class wanted to get up, but as far as I could make out, the boys sort of vetoed it, probably a little afraid of the cold, so they couldn't have it."

"What class was that?" asked the harsh voice I had heard first.

"Why, that class, you know, that wears the funny little pie-shaped things on their heads, blue and gray, perfectly ridiculous, I call 'em, but humans have queer notions."

"Class distinctions show commendable class spirit," grated the first voice sententiously, "that class by the way is the Senior Academy class, a very superior class indeed, somewhat youthful and full of their own conceit, to be sure, but none the less, a fine class. I take a great interest in that class for they have in them the unmistakable signs of greatness."

"Excuse me," interrupted the other humbly, "but I've always wanted to know what were the signs of greatness."

"The signs of greatness," continued the first loftily and squeaking with importance, "are many, such as absentmindedness and disregard of time."

"That's evident about ten-thirty, Monday morning," mumbled the other.

"But I was thinking in particular of their aversion to frivolities as shown by their few social events and the scanty attendance upon them. Naturally my standpoint is rather fixed and things come to somewhat of a standstill about me yet from my observation of them, they were not 'born to blush unseen.' That's from a poem. I know it and when somebody who sat on me this morning was trying to learn it, I had to squeeze my bolts to keep from prompting him. But as I was saying, that class of 1908 will make their mark or I'll eat my varnish."

A silence full of awe followed; then voice number two began timidly:

"Say, who's that man that talks to them Monday morning?"

"That," said the other, "is Mr. Peck, the principal of the Academy."

"Well, he's a peach."

"A what?" gasped the other.

"Oh a regular jim dandy, a top notcher, you know."

"I gather," remarked the other stiffly, "that you desire to convey the impression that he is a remarkably fine man, and I heartily agree with that sentiment, but couched in such language, never!"

"I learned it from the Glee Club boys," was the meek apology.

Taking advantage of the mollified lull that followed, I slipped to the door and passed out, leaving them gossiping in the twilight.

Class History

For the third time in the history of the class we pick up the Annual and gaze longingly for something which tells us that we are known to exist. On both previous occasions our faces wore an expression of regret and chagrin, but at last it is one of pleasure and surprise to find that we have placed our foot on the first round.

As we sat in chapel in our Junior Cad. year, we looked upon the College Senior with a feeling of awe and admiration, wondering all the time if a small, insignificant Junior Cad. had the right to ever think of occupying a similar place.

During our Junior Middle year, we began to realize that another Senior had arisen, that he had not always been one, and that probably he might have been a Junior Middler at some period of his course.

And here we are Middlers. From this time our real history begins, for it was in the fall of 1903 that the members met and organized the class of 1909. As a result many parties have been given, and very successfully, too. Much credit must be given to the young ladies of the class for the splendid leap year party given to the young men. It was a decided success, to say the least. Then there was a skating party and a general class party.

We are young, as yet, and as we look ahead five years, we almost doubt whether or not the final goal shall really be gained. The doubt is but momentary, however, because a firm resolve has always uprooted any misgiving. So look out for us. We are coming sixty strong.

Phi Delta

BROUGHT into being sixty-five years ago—behind her a long train of illustrious names and well-performed deeds—Phi Delta has launched herself upon the concrete present with all the vigor of youth—and some besides. To say that this has been a prosperous year for old Phi Delta were but to speak with the conservatism that has ever characterized her better moods. She has never failed to contribute her fair share of the men who have been prominent in the activities of college life. We are justified in saying that she has been deservedly popular. Be it as it may, her gates have been thronged with those who would be of her; her walls have looked down upon a goodly company, and echoed to the best words of many of Oberlin's best men.

And so, we are content with the past, hopeful for the present,—and as for the dim future,—not fearful.

But perhaps the gentle reader would appreciate a side-light on a Monday evening meeting of the authorized variety. Possibly nothing could be more explicit, more naïve, more delightfully efflorescent than the humbly submitted account of a Junior Cad, who chanced to stray within the portals.

The dissertation is in the deeply theological and highly scriptural style, peculiar to Junior Cads.

And it came to pass when the ninth month of the year was come, even that which is called September, that one of low degree, yea, one which had suffered much travail and had been laughed to scorn by the sons of Belial, which are upper-classmen, did take it upon himself to go unto a far country, even unto the Hall which is called Peters, and to pay his vows at the castle of Phi Delta. Selah.

And when the Cad had come to the castle of Phi Delta, even to the court which is called Peters, he did remove his sandals, and did wash his parched feet in the fountain.

Yea, did he so, that he might not shake the dust of his feet into that Chamber which is made sacred by the libatious paint and varnish of him that is called Brown, even Reuben of the tribe of Buster.

And it came to pass that when he had entered the sacred chamber, the High Priest of Bail of the tribe of Harry did give him a seat in the synagogue. Selah.

And now that even was come, for it was about the sixth hour, the High Priest did call all the people together and commanded that they should sing a new song. And then came a still, small voice, followed by divers noises.

Now, when a great silence had encompassed about all them that were gathered together, the scribe did unroll the parchment and he did name the name of all them that were in the congregation. Did he even so.

And there arose one among the brethren who was called Bartholomew, and thereupon he did reprove his brethren. Yea, did he make their names a hissing and a byword. And Bartholomew was a critic.

Then spake the High Priest and he proclaimed in a loud voice that Reuben of the tribe of Buster had aught to say unto them. And there went up a great wailing and much gnashing of teeth. And all the people looked, and behold the window had gird up its sash and the curtain was rent.

Then did Reuben open his mouth and spake unto them; and there came the sound of a mighty wind. Reuben got himself back again and sat down.

And it came to pass that the High Priest rose up and spake unto the people, saying: "David, of the tribe of Jones has not been about his business, and he has naught to give thee. And lo, there was much rejoicing, though there were some that pointed the finger of scorn.

And as it was about the eighth hour of the night all the people did rise up with one accord and depart into the land of Dope which is called Hobbs.

So endeth the dissertation of the Junior Cad.

Phi Kappa Pi

THE iron finger of the past directs a man's foot-steps far more than he imagines. He reflects many of the tendencies and ideals of his fathers. In the life of a nation the spirit of its founders is a force continually felt in the shaping of its policies. This principle is true of any lasting movement or valuable organization. The Phi Kappa Pi society was created in a spirit of thoughtful earnestness. "Friendship and Progress" was more than a motto. It was the real living purpose in the organization.

As the years went by, bringing many changes, the weekly meetings still retained this characteristic intensity of effort. The orations were written upon subjects of sublime proportions. The debaters waxed eloquent and wrathful in their brave efforts to solve problems of gigantic import. Those were stirring days. States-rights, nullification, rebellion, secession; such were the great issues for debate. The political career was then an arena for individual thought and effort—not merely a field of operations for the Machine. Great policies of government with their imperishable precedents were being wrought. Because the power and the wish to legislate was retained by the people, every question made a direct personal appeal. Phi Kappa Pi caught the inspiration of this spirit and the great problems had a thorough hearing. The policy pursued in the Mexican War was denounced as the bullying barbarism of a stronger nation. The slaves had all been freed and enfranchised before a big, awkward boy out in Illinois even dreamed of his destiny. As one historian has it; every great act recorded in our national history since the birth of our society has received its moral support or unmistakable signs of its disapproval. Much of this discussion was undoubtedly immature, but the society partook of these weekly feasts of unripe wisdom and prospered amazingly. Although society work was charged with a stern earnestness of purpose, the early records show here and there touches in lighter vein. The motion is made to debar a member from further privileges because of an abnormal enthusiasm for the co-educational idea and the joyous laughter of our fathers comes down to us.

The true Phi Kappa spirit of thoughtful work has characterized the past year, but a few of our members are so crammed with wit in addition to the more stable mental qualities, that an occasional facetious explosion takes place. One silver-tongued Senior, for instance, read a most profound essay, treating easily and fluently the entire situation of philosophical thought in the first few centuries A. D. and then had the nerve, a few minutes later, to plead eloquently for the collection of all rents in our sacred battle-scarred flag. Happily, such frivolity has been of rare occurrence, and we are bringing the year to a close with a feeling that the old ideals and standards of Phi Kappa Pi are still a great working force in the society.

AT the first meeting of the year, L. L. S. felt almost disheartened. The row of empty seats where the worthy members of '03 had sat was appallingly long. Last year her twenty-six Seniors were her pride and boast, but when they had gone, leaving but one to tell the tale, the loss was keenly felt. The members of '04, the Senior members, conscious of their newly-acquired caps and gowns, and of the responsibilities of their position, felt quite unequal to the burdens laid upon them. But they were encouraged by the continued presence of Miss Jones and were aided by the words of wisdom that fell from the lips of the post-graduate member.

L. L. S., mindful of many shortcomings, thought it best to concentrate her year's attention upon a few points. Constant agitation on the part of critics and extempore speakers has achieved a most gratifying result in one matter: L. L. S. members invariably "walk swiftly and gracefully to the platform," when called upon for any exercise. Miss Barrows led the attack against the habit of applauding indiscriminately every member on the program. L. L. S. is proving the truth of all that has ever been said or written about the strength of habit, and the fight has been a long one on account of the unsuspected force of custom, but she feels now that victory is almost within her grasp. The orations continue to be as unemotional as tradition leads us to think they should be, and L. L. S. is proudly conscious of living up to the ideals of her fore-mothers.

The stories have been a feature of the year. Whatever may be said in praise or blame of the problem novel, only praise was given to Miss Follansbee when she was brave enough to attack the detested class-list in a short story. Miss Hillis had long protested that she could not write a story, but when that exercise was assigned to her, her Spartan-like devotion to duty carried her through, and she became one more illustration of the fact that you can do anything you try to do. Miss Hillis' stoical submission to the demands made upon her is in striking contrast to the behavior of Miss Doerschuk, who, rather than write a story for society, goes off on a trip to Europe the day before she is to appear.

In closing we would express our assurance that as another group of Seniors passes out into the great "unheard-of-again," their successors will worthily maintain the standard set long ago by members of L. L. S.

Aelioian

THE "Light Bearers" have spent many pleasant and profitable Monday evenings together during the past year. But especially noteworthy were the meetings when Miss Purcell, '04 gave a story; when Miss Hatch, '04 gave an extempore; and when Miss Leggatt, '05 immersed the society, president and all, into the seething pool of intricate parliamentary proceedings. Miss Leggatt has certainly worked a reform in the parliamentary drill of Aelioian and more than one member of the society has profited by instruction gained in Roberts Rules of Order, at Room 7, Talcott Hall.

All the prominent social and economic questions of the day have been discussed, during the year, by Aelioian debaters. Interest in the subject for debate has generally been high, whether the question has been, "Resolved, That young men ought to take cooking lessons," or, "Resolved, That the government should appropriate money for the building and maintenance of roads."

A program of Christmas stories and musical selections was given again this year and there is no doubt but that it will become an annual feature.

One of the most pleasant evenings that Aelioian has spent was that on which Dr. Luce entertained the three girls' societies. Professor Dickinson gave the history of Parsifal and Professor Breckenridge played selections from the opera.

The '03 girls have not been forgotten. The bas-relief of the Bachantes, which they left to the society as a memorial gift, besides being a source of pleasure from the artistic point of view, reminds the society of its members of '03, who were always brimming over with mirth and laughter. This piece of sculpture has also occasioned much discussion in parliamentary drill. During the early part of the year it rested on two of L. L. S.'s red plush upholstered chairs. The question as to where it should be hung was a weighty matter and required about six months of consideration before it could be settled.

One of the members, and a Junior she was, too, who committed a serious offense against parliamentary etiquette by hiding the gavel, thereby forcing the president to call society to order with a lead pencil, is still awaiting trial. There have been no other serious offenses and on the whole the "sergeant-at-arms," an office to which Miss Sylvester has often been elected, has had few duties other than furnishing the members with draughts (?) and the judges with lead pencils. But all things have an end, so here's the end of this.

Alpha Zeta

IN former years the historian of Alpha Zeta has had his labors very much lightened by some kind god or goddess who has appeared to him in his dreams and told him to write "thus and so." Sometimes, too, he has had in his meditations a vision of Alpha Zeta as she is to be when the intangible "standard" set up from week to week by our critics is attained. This year the historian has had no visitation nor vision; he must write with his eyes on the facts and with a full realization of what Alpha Zeta and her work actually are.

It was with considerable depression of spirits that our meetings opened for several weeks. The large number of empty seats have mute testimony to our great loss of 1903 men. Yet the remaining men set about valiantly the task of building up the society, and today we feel that we are even stronger than at the same time last year.

Who are some of the men who have helped in this work and who are making Alpha Zeta what it is? Among the Seniors we may mention McIntosh, Edgerton, and Hope, men whose names stand for the best things in the college man's life. Their influence has ever been for the good and their places will be hard to fill. Then there is Bissell the keen critic, Sackett the untiring, modest worker, Kolbe the authority on parliamentary procedure, and Sturges, a new man in '04, who will forget him? All these men have contributed much to the life of our society.

When we come to the Juniors we fear to mention any one as a particularly bright "star," for in their various spheres they are all "shining lights." Bellows, who brings things "in front of the society" instead of before it, is head and shoulders above all the others. Debate and criticism are his strong points, and his analyses of Dick and his unbecoming conduct, will long be remembered. E. D. Jones is one of our latest additions. His genius finds expression as a presiding officer, and though he does not know the difference yet between a "division" and "the orders of the day," his close application to Robert's rules of order augurs well for the future.

Comstock and Earl are noted for many things outside of the society rooms, but with that we have nothing to do. Here we can only pay a slight tribute to their devotion to Alpha Zeta in every line of its work.

Our Sophomore members form a strong element in our society this year and foremost among them stands A. W. Goodenough, the winner of the home oratorical contest. This is the first time for a number of years that an Alpha Zeta man has secured this honor, and we congratulate Alpha Zeta and the Sophomore class for having such an able man on their lists. Another prominent man is Miller, who made the Intercollegiate debate team. Tom Jay has the honor of presenting the most names for membership, and so we may say that though the Sophomore class as a rule is without honor in its college, yet in Alpha Zeta it occupies a worthy place. Our freshman material is developing rapidly; there are few of them, but they are of the right kind.

In closing this brief resumé then, we can see no reason for discouragement in our prospects for the future. Let us who are left to carry on the work during the coming years put into it our best efforts and the "standard" will indeed become a real thing.

Phi Alpha Phi

NO class of Oberlin students can better appreciate the hardships and struggles of our Puritan forefathers than the charter members of Phi Alpha Phi. These ten pilgrims in the year nineteen hundred and two, for the faith that was in them, sacrificed the serene popularity of ordinary college life to join their lot with that of the alien and the outcast. It was a daring deed to so disturb the quiet and well regulated life of Oberlin, as to present to the faculty a petition for a new literary society among the young women. Only a courage born of conviction could have done it, and only a wonderfully optimistic perseverance could have braved the storm which followed. No longer respected college citizens, they were regarded as revolutionists plotting to undermine the established precedent in society regulation divinely revealed to the early Oberlinites even as the Book of Mormon to Joseph Smith. The students orated in indignation meetings, the faculty argued, even the alumni became excited. A change in the U. L. A. constitution would be necessary—unheard of impossibility! A third organization could not enter the inter-society contest—unsurmountable barrier! No Mr. Rockefeller had offered the thousands necessary for a second Sturges Hall, and the entire matter was supposed to be settled! But like the Plymouth Colony, the pilgrim band flourished on its stern and rock-bound coast in spite of contempt from the alumni, ridicule from the students, and baleful prophecies of future ruin of Oberlin ideals on the part of many in the faculty. Today, Phi Alpha Phi has won for herself a place in the Oberlin life. Even the gentleman from Alpha Zeta has been convinced that the chief aim of her organization was not primarily for the purpose of drinking tea or darning hosiery.

As the second year of work draws to a close, Phi Alpha Phi has reason to be proud of all she has accomplished. Twenty-seven members instead of ten now respond to roll-call and have a voice in the proceedings of the Union Library Association, but greatest victory of all, she has won the good will which at first was so rigorously denied her. "Friendship, Truth, Progress," is her motto. Friendship first—that each member may hold the other in peculiar loyalty and affection. Truth, as exemplified in the faithful attendance to the duties assigned by the program committee. Progress—as a direct result of deepening personal relationships and capacity for attainment. Even as the little colony of our forefathers formed the nucleus of a prosperous nation, so Phi Alpha Phi looks to the future when her Alumnæ shall come from the east and the west, and shall sit down with her sister societies at the Love Feast of the commencement time.

The REVIEW! When, where, and how often does it happen? What is it? Who is responsible for it? Who reads it? Who subscribes for it—and who pays his subscription? These are sufficient questions to serve as an outline for a book. But to retail out tale in detail.

The Board begins on Friday, takes a new start on Saturday, and on Monday morning resumes in dead earnest the weekly process of grinding out a Review. But let us take a glimpse on a Monday morning of the editorial sanctum, the home of the "official organ" of the College. The signs of this are two desks, a table and half a dozen chairs. Upon the table sit the first and second assistant editors—(anywhere else they would be called a paste-pot and shears). By their side are a student directory, a college catalogue, a quinquennial and a dictionary, although you would never suspect such office furniture from the number of misspelled words in the Review. Scattered around most promiscuously, also, are exchanges of all sizes, shapes, and colors. At one desk sits "Mac" slinging purple ink over editorial sheets. At his side "Edgie" is "covering" Y. M. C. A., while "Patt's" facile pen is feeding ream after ream of paper with news. That boy needs more paper to say things on than the president of the Amalgamated Association of Union Pencil-shovers,—or Mrs. Martin.

Presently Miss Laird comes in with her usual good "graft" of news, and Miss Grant brings back her literary proof (those two girls are like the balm of Gilead to a troubled editor's heart). Next Joe appears with a plusness as to whiskers and a minusness as to hair and demands more "copy." A half bushel is supplied and he goes off quite happy. A pale wave of sulphur vapor is borne in from the composing-room. There is no fire, though. It is only the linotype man swearing at some of Lord's hand-writing. Then Miller comes stumping out to ask the "Duke of Caciac," which is, being interpreted, Eric Anderson, for more adv. copy, u. s. w. tout le jour. On Tuesday morning there is a slight respite, but the trouble begins at 2:00 o'clock, when NEWS "slush" is off the machine and that "rag" is on the press. Then galley proof, and page proof follow each other in as rapid succession as is compatible with the unusually speedy methods of the NEWS office; "Stet" put the "whole works" on the press, Moore binds it and the Review appears. The other questions must wait until next time, for "Thirty's on the hook."

The Cabinet of the Young Women's Christian Association for the past year is to be highly commended on two great undertakings.

The first was the preparation for the State Convention held in the fall, which necessitated the providing of entertainment for two hundred delegates representing nearly every college in Ohio. The enthusiasm which characterized the convention, and the personal contact with representative national workers added a new inspiration to every member of the Association.

The other undertaking was the employment of a General Secretary for half time. Oberlin is the second College Association in Ohio to employ such a secretary. Ohio State University has had one for two years.

The general committee work has been good; that of the Bible Study committee showing perhaps a greater advance than any other. Through the work of this committee a vast majority of the young women at the beginning of the year joined Bible circles, studying the course used by President King in his Training Class. The work has always received a new impetus from the visits of the State Secretary, Miss Spencer, who has favored Oberlin with three this school year.

In some respects the year has been eminently successful. New difficulties have detracted from the attendance, but much faithful work has been done.

Oberlin's Representative at Shansi

AT a special assembly on the Friday following the Day of Prayer for Colleges during January, 1904, the students of Oberlin College pledged the sum of thirteen hundred and fifty dollars to support a missionary in the field at Shansi, China. In the mind of one unacquainted with the special circumstances attending this gift, there might arise certain questions. What were the motives that prompted this action? Was such an action appropriate? Let us glance at the facts for a moment and see how we shall answer.

The mission at Shansi was founded by men and women who had gone out from Oberlin; it had always been conducted by representatives of Oberlin; it was in the charge of Oberlin missionaries at the time it was destroyed during the Boxer uprising. In the destruction of that mission, several of these noble men and women lost their lives. For several years, the students of Oberlin had paid the all too meagre salary of at least one of these workers at the Shansi field. Could Oberlin allow this great centre of influence for good, a part of her very self, to remain in ruins? Other schools had their chosen men at work; was Oberlin, whose sons and daughters had given their lives in a work of helpfulness and love, to stand back and see others take her place at the front? It could not be. The mission must be re-established; a worthy man must be sent to start anew the work which, for a time, a great disaster had checked.

Who was this man to be? Could one be found suited in every way to undertake this great task? Without the slightest hesitation, the entire student body turned to him who had so recently been among them, Paul Leaton Corbin. A strong physique, exceptional intellectual ability, a deeply consecrated Christian spirit, a purpose and a longing hope to work for his Master on the spot where his fellow alumni had worked and died, a strong belief in the principles underlying the work at Oberlin, and a great love for the school itself—all these marked him as the man whom they sought.

In this work he was not to be alone. She whose life had already been joined to his in love was to go with him to this mission field, his constant companion and help. Miss Miriam Locke, an Oberlin student, a true Christian woman, was in every way capable of bearing with him the duties of this field of labor.

Surely it was appropriate that the students of Oberlin College, prompted by the belief in the value of the undertaking and by a perfect trust and confidence in the man whom they were to send, should again pledge themselves to the support of a representative in this great mission field. Today, Oberlin may well be proud that, at a post of such importance, she is to be represented by that man, strong in body, mind, and spirit, Paul Leaton Corbin.

The additional support of a strong Advisory Board, the interest and earnestness of its members, an unusual large number of strong men in religious work who are leaders in all departments of college activity, the hearty support of the President, Faculty and Alumni of the institution, and the efficient help rendered by Mr. John P. Davies, '00, at the opening of the year, have made this a "Red Letter" year for the Y. M. C. A. work in all departments of its activities.

The membership has increased from 256 to 350, the enrollment of the Bible study classes from 90 to 225 and Mission study from 17 to 35. The treasurer reports last year's deficit wiped out, this year's budget raised and a balance in the treasury.

In view of past developments, present needs, and greatest possibilities next year, the Advisory Board has decided to employ a General Secretary on full time for next year.

The Week of Prayer and the addresses by Professor Bosworth and Fred B. Smith will be remembered as marking an epoch of great spiritual interest in Oberlin College, and the beginning of a Christian life for many of the students.

Every year of new progress emphasizes anew the fact that the greatest need of the Oberlin men is an Association building. Oberlin offers a unique opportunity for such a building and nothing else is so much needed to enlarge the activities of the men of the institution.

The Art Exhibit

AMONG the interesting events of the present collegiate year the exhibition of photographs of works of art, held in the Warner gymnasium from March twenty-eighth to April ninth, claims the foremost place. Such displays have become an established institution, occurring every two years in alternation with the May musical festivals, the recent exhibition being the fourth of its kind. Six years ago the first of the series, in which five or six hundred pictures were shown, was held in the Rockefeller rink at commencement time. Two years later a similar exhibition was given in the same building. The rapid growth of the collection owned by the college made it necessary to find larger quarters, and the erection of the Warner gymnasium furnished an admirable temporary art gallery. The exhibition two years ago was very gratifying in respect to character and attendance, but this year the interest shown was far beyond the most sanguine expectation. The collection also had been greatly enriched by recent purchases, and by pictures loaned by prominent art publishers.

Besides the large collection of photographs owned by the college, rep-

representing chiefly the art of antiquity, the Renaissance in Italy, and the schools of Holland and Spain in the 17th century, the features of the exhibition were as follows:

One hundred and sixty photogravures, loaned by the Berlin Photographic Company, chiefly reproductions of paintings in the Imperial gallery of Vienna; three hundred carbon photographs, loaned by A. W. Elson & Co., of Boston, illustrative of ancient, Renaissance and modern art; two hundred and sixty Copley prints, from the house of Curtis & Cameron, Boston, devoted chiefly to American art; two hundred and twenty-five reproductions, many of them colored, illustrative of the land and art of Egypt; fifty plates from Furtwängler & Reichhold's great work on Greek vase painting; and a collection of two hundred books on art from the libraries of the college and the Union Library Association, for the free use of visitors.

Illustrated lectures were given by Professor Johnston on "The Temples of Egypt" and "The Van Eycks;" by Professor Martin on "The Acropolis at Athens" and "Some Famous Equestrian Statues;" by Professor Cole on "The Principal Monuments of the Roman Forum;" by Professor Dickinson on "How to Study Pictures;" by Miss Monroe on "Wells Cathedral" and "Perugia;" and by Professor Dennison of Michigan University, formerly of Oberlin College, on "Some Roman Portraits." A reading was given by Professor Luce of selections from the art poems of Browning, with critical comments.

The improvised art gallery presented a stirring sight, especially on lecture afternoons. Every available foot of space upon the walls of the gallery and the temporary wire screens which extended entirely around the main floor, was hung with photographs. The total number exceeded 2,000, a large proportion being carbons and photogravures of the finest quality. The floor and galleries were at times thronged with spectators, including college students, citizens of Oberlin, and visitors from surrounding towns. Seven or eight hundred people were regular attendants upon the lectures. The capacity of the great building was often taxed to the utmost, notwithstanding the fact that the majority of the students were out of town during the recess. That so many members of the college must lose the benefit of this exhibition is certainly a matter of regret, but it would have been impossible for the members of the committee to give the necessary labor at any other time than in the vacation.

The brilliant success of the exhibition was due to the indefatigable zeal of the faculty committee, consisting of Professors Johnston, Martin, Cole and St. John. They sacrificed their much-needed vacation rest, attended vigilantly to the multitude of details, arranged and hung the pictures and were in constant attendance day and night, providing every means of pleasure and benefit to the visitors that such an occasion can involve.

After all, the most gratifying feature of this exhibition is the remarkable interest shown by the public. It is a sign of the quick responsiveness to new and valuable movements and ideas that Oberlin always shows, that the art revival which is so conspicuous in the country at large should have already made itself strongly felt in this community. It is seen in the public schools, where the young people showed the greatest eagerness to avail themselves of the opportunity the exhibition afforded them to procure pictures for the adornment of their school buildings. There can be no question that when the hoped-for art gallery is erected, containing the Olney bequest in addition to the other collections in the possession of the college, the art department, with its library and lecture system, will prove one of the most valuable features of the institution, and none will be more highly appreciated.

The net gain from admission fees was four or five hundred dollars. The greater part of this sum will be used for the purchase of photographs representing the history of both ancient and modern art. A number of the finest pictures in the Copley & Elson loan collections were bought at the time of the exhibition. Little by little the empty places in the college collection will be filled and the weak points strengthened. It is often the work of more than one generation to gather a store of reproductions in which every phase of art has its just representation. It was melancholy to see these beautiful works taken down and stored away, not to be seen again for two years except by comparatively few in the class room. The effect of the exhibition, however, will remain, for it has stimulated many to wider studies and a larger appreciation of the beauty of the works of human genius.

EDWARD DICKINSON.

"A Dramatic Evening"

Bradley Auditorium, Saturday Evening, January 16, 1904

Scene: Mrs. Perkin's drawing room in New York.

SYNOPSIS.

Mr. and Mrs. Perkins are anticipating a pleasant evening with Sir Henry Irving. While waiting for the carriage, they are surprised by a trio of jovial villains, members of an amateur dramatic club. Mrs. Perkins had forgotten to tell Perkins of the engagement. The latter holds all efforts in amateur dramatics in peculiar horror and with his evening spoiled—the feelings of the long suffering man are better imagined than described. The depredations upon his peaceful household, which Yardsley manages with unalloyed enthusiasm, do not enhance his peace of mind.

The Olney Art Collection

THE Olney Art Collection is the most notable gift of the year and among the most valuable gifts ever received by the College. It was the joint bequest of Mr. Charles F. Olney and Mrs. Abigail Bradley Olney of Pilgrim Church, Cleveland.

Mr. Olney was not officially connected with the College, but for a number of years past, and especially since his pastor, Rev. Charles S. Mills, D. D., had been a member of the Board of Trustees, he had been a frequent and interested visitor in Oberlin. He was an ardent lover of the best music and availed himself of every opportunity to hear the Musical Union render the great oratorios.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Olney were deeply in sympathy with the religious ideals and with the standards of social life and conduct which are honored in Oberlin. Mrs. Olney had known Oberlin through a favorite niece who was once a student here, and Mr. Olney's interest in Oberlin dated back to his childhood. Both President Barrows and President King were often guests in the beautiful and hospitable Olney home.

At the time of President King's election Mr. Olney wrote as follows:

"From a boy Oberlin has been one of the greatest inspirations of my life, for it has invariably stood for the loftiest ideals in human character. Firm as a rock has been her position. * * * Oberlin, from first to last, has been truly patriotic. She was right on the slavery question, she is right on the temperance question, she is right on the tobacco question. She is a tower of strength to the Nation in these days of venal politics. Yes, I love Oberlin, and loving her as I have done and do, it is natural that my heart's desire should be to see the helm of the Institution in the hands of one who seemingly has been raised up by a beneficent Providence to succeed the noble and gifted Dr. Barrows."

This remarkable collection was the result of a life-time of enthusiasm. Its owners prized it not simply as a personal possession, but because of the good they could do with it, and in the beautiful Greek temple which was built for it as an annex to the Olney home it brought beauty and cheer into the lives of thousands of people.

The bequest to Oberlin was made because Mr. and Mrs. Olney believed that in Oberlin it could continue to do more good than anywhere else. They regarded its possession as a trust, and they passed on to the College their trusteeship believing that in this way they could best perpetuate their own ideal of service to the community. Here in Oberlin it will perpetually bring the influence of the Beautiful into the lives of successive generations of students.

Oberlin maintains the highest ideals and occupies a conspicuous and influential place in the art of Music. The possession of this great art collection will help the College to have large influence in another department of art which has hitherto had but small part in the Oberlin life.

It is difficult to estimate the money value of the collection, but it is supposed to represent about a quarter of a million dollars.

Oberlin will ever hold in grateful memory these generous donors.

Foot Ball

Season of 1903

WHEN the record of the 1903 foot ball team is looked at only in the light of scores made, or when the games won and lost are considered, it may seem a little unusual that there should be any desire to preserve a history of the season. And yet, to one who is thoroughly familiar with the past season, there is much in the record made by the team that gives pride and enthusiasm for the men, and a sense of satisfaction in the results accomplished.

Although, from outward appearances, the 1903 team was not so successful as the teams of 1892, 1893, 1898, and 1901, yet it should be placed along side of these really greatest Oberlin teams. In fact, in some respects the 1903 team might be placed above these teams, given first rank for what they did. This statement may seem an extraordinary one, but we believe the truth of it will be recognized by all, when the inner history of the season, the facts about the season that are known to and appreciated by only a few, are made known.

In the personnel of the team we do not find any one that could be compared with some of Oberlin's former stars. We see there no Williams, or Teeters or Wise, such as were found on the 1892 and 1893 teams. Nor do find any one who in experience or physical ability equalled a Davis or Chez or Edgerton of the '98 team. It is equally true that in material, it was not the equal of the 1901 team. As to schedule played, so far as the state games were concerned, the games were more difficult. When, then, we consider that the 1903 team neither in experience nor in physical ability was equal to the championship teams of the past, and that Oberlin with one exception was meeting teams superior and in some cases vastly superior to the teams opposed to her in other years, the record made by the team does not present the dark side that it does from a superficial glance. But we would not for a moment hold up the record of games won as a just ground for giving unusual honor to the team, for in the playing strength of the team, in its ability to win games, the one essential and the only one of any team that concerns the vast majority of its supporters, the team of last fall could not in any sense be considered equal to the championship teams mentioned above. But this fact in no way lessens our appreciation and admiration for the team.

As we have just said, in physical fitness the men were not equal to the championship teams. In all the other qualities which go to make a successful team, in spirit and dash, nerve and determination, team unity and support, it was the peer of all Oberlin teams. It must be remembered that while other Oberlin teams have shown praiseworthy and unusual spirit, they did it when playing against opponents who were recognized as only their equal, and often their inferiors, when man for man in experience and physical qualities they were on equal terms. We would not wish to insinuate that they would not have shown the same spirit under more adverse circumstances, had the occasion demanded it, for I have known, or played on, or coached every Oberlin team and know whereof I speak. But the 1903 team in every contest was outweighed usually man for man and always as a team. No opportunity was given to train the green team against light opponents, but from first to last they were playing against teams of equal or more experience and of greater weight and physical ability. And through it all the men never let up, but every man did his best and the end of the games found him, though often outplayed, still playing his best.

Oberlin began the season with the darkest prospects, with but few old men and no first-class new material. There was no surprise that Oberlin failed to win the championship. The only wonder was that at the end of the season she should have been fighting for second place. During the second week of the season the team became enthused with the spirit that made it possible for Oberlin to do as well as she did. There was no fault finding,

KENYON ABOUT TO PUNT.

no complaining, nothing but good will and encouragement. The team although it lost the championship gained a greater victory in that it won the good will of the student body. It is always easy to find support for a victorious team, but few teams have ever won a higher place in the esteem of the student body than did the 1903 team. The spirit that filled the team was found as well in its supporters. There was absolutely no spirit of criticism. In its place appeared a spirit of utmost confidence, not a confidence that the championship would be won, for all realized that that was impossible, but a confidence that the team would do its very best. A closer and more friendly feeling never existed between any student body and athletic team. It seems to me that no greater praise can be given to any team. It was no longer eleven men that were struggling to win. It was Oberlin that lost, not the team. Words fail to give an adequate idea of the cordial, sympathetic and helpful spirit which existed, when a team which is marked from the beginning as a losing one, can win such hearty, loyal, enthusiastic and cordial support from a student body as few victorious teams have ever done. When they can do this they have made a record that has been surpassed by few teams and they should be given honor equal to a championship team.

The account of one game will show more clearly this united feeling. In the contest with Case School every one recognized the fact that Case would win. But the Oberlin supporters turned out in larger numbers than had ever before attended a game. They had the greatest confidence that Oberlin would do her best. The team played up to their anticipations. Outweighed by Case's more experienced team, the Oberlin men went into play after play with all the energy they could summon, and long after the game was lost they continued to play with spirit and dash. Although Oberlin lost sixteen to five, it was a most pleasing experience to go from Dill field defeated and hear on all sides from friends and opponents the most cordial words of appreciation for the team and its playing, and as the team left the field for the Gymnasium to have a thousand or more loyal supporters escort the men to the dressing rooms. An old veteran of many Oberlin teams but expressed the common feeling when he said, "I never saw an Oberlin team defeated before when I did not feel like criticising, but I have the greatest respect for the team and its playing and would not criticise if I could. I never felt more like throwing up my hat and yelling for any team than I do now." I have written the above in no spirit of apology for the record of the team, but because I believe the team is thoroughly deserving of it.

Now a few words as to the season in detail. The week's preliminary practice at Linwood Park did much to prepare the team for the hard schedule. The Ohio Normal game, in which little good football was seen, was a hard one for the team to start in on. Oberlin won, 10-11, because her men were in better condition. The Kenyon game Oberlin could have won, because of the superior condition of her men, had it been possible to make Kenyon play when she was being forced back to her goal line. It resulted in no score for either side. In the Wooster game, the team showed all the speed and spirit that characterized its play later in the season and won with ease by a score of 39-0, at all times playing Wooster off her feet and never giving her an opportunity to show her real strength. The Delaware game presented the greatest surprise of the year. Delaware had been looked upon as a possible winner, but the same sort of playing which had made it possible to win the Wooster game brought the same result, 39-0. Captain Miller scored two field goals in this game, the first ever scored by an Oberlin man.

CASE KICKING OFF.

In the Purdue game Oberlin, greatly outweighed, lost the game 18-2, through her wretched fumbling at critical moments. Enough has already been said of the Case game. If one must remember the lost games, he can not do better than remember how gloriously our team lost to Case.

Oberlin lost to Columbus, 27-5, in the roughest game in many years. Columbus had an unusually heavy team and won through her weight rather than skill. As was to be expected, Oberlin lost to Ann Arbor, but by a smaller score than in the previous year. In a word, Oberlin lost her games because of lack of weight. In the skill of the game and team play Oberlin was the equal, if not the superior, of any team in the State.

After all has been said, I have more respect for the 1903 football team than any other team that has ever represented Oberlin.

Base Ball

CAPTAIN MORGAN, '03.

The baseball season was characterized by extremes of good and bad playing. The team, composed for the most part of experienced men, showed, at times, championship form, while in other games their work resembled the playing of green and inexperienced material that had been hastily organized for the occasion.

Preliminary training was commenced in the cage early in February and by the time the weather would permit of outdoor work, strong candidates had been developed for the places left vacant by the graduation of players. The season promised to be a very successful one.

Of the old men, Morgan, Shepler, Tenney, Lightner, Hoopes, and Hotchkiss were still in school. Reed was clearly the best of the new men tried out for the vacancy at third. Todd was selected to do the catching and McCloskey was chosen for center field and second pitcher. Conkey and Grosvenor were the substitutes.

The first game on the hard schedule, which had been arranged, was with Hiram on April 20th and resulted in a victory for Oberlin by a score of 7-0. Oberlin used three pitchers, Tenney, McCloskey and Conkey. All of them did good work, allowing Hiram but three hits. The team batted and fielded well, making eleven hits and but one error.

On April 25th, Oberlin won from Kenyon by a score of 5-1. The day was wet and cold and a strong wind was blowing. Neither side succeeded in scoring until the eighth inning, when Kenyon made her only run, which looked to be enough to win the game. But when Oberlin took her bat the spectators were treated to as splendid a batting rally as has ever been seen in Oberlin. Tenney began the rally with a clean single and the next several men hit safely. As a result, Oberlin scored five runs and won what many believed was a lost game. Tenney pitched the first of his excellent games, allowing Kenyon but four hits. Oberlin made right off the pitching of Cromley. Although the diamond was wet so that accurate fielding was well nigh impossible, Oberlin made but two errors.

In the next game, which was with Michigan, Oberlin showed the erratic playing which at times was to characterize her work. Three hits and five errors gave Ann Arbor the game 12-1.

In previous years we had succeeded in winning from Chicago on our own grounds, but many thought because of Oberlin's poor showing against Ann Arbor that she would also lose to Chicago. But Oberlin played ball and won by a score of 6-2. McCloskey pitched his best game, holding Chicago to six hits. He was given fair support by his team mates in the field and excellent support at the bat.

The Wooster game gave Conkey a chance to show what he could do in an entire game. He won his game by a score of 10-1. Up to this point in the schedule Oberlin had, for the most part, played good, consistent ball and her prospects for winning a state championship were excellent. She threw away her opportunity of finishing first among the colleges of the State by presenting Case with a game. There was no excuse whatever for losing the game. Oberlin made more hits than Case did, but she also very generously bunched two or three errors on comparatively easy chances along with Case's hits, thus allowing Case to take the game by the score of 4-5 and incidentally win the championship.

The game that gave most satisfaction and the one in which the team showed its ability to best advantage was the contest with O. S. U. at Oberlin. Tenney pitched a remarkable game. The State team secured but three hits, while Oberlin made ten nice clean drives. It was a pleasure to see the confidence with which the men played and to observe the almost perfect team work which they displayed in backing up and supporting each other. The score was 9-3.

The varsity's greatest honor was to win the next game, which was with the University of Michigan team. The game furnished the greatest contrast in playing. Had the Oberlin team gone into the game with plans fully matured, to demonstrate the difference between the very best and the most distressing kind of wretched playing, they could not have succeeded better. Tenney was in the box for Oberlin and up to the seventh Ann Arbor had scored but twice, while Oberlin had fielded beautifully, and by most excellent team batting had secured eleven runs. At this stage in the game every one was taking things easily in the keen enjoyment of the game. There was never a thought but that the game was won. But the team had other plans. Tenney weakened, the infield went to pieces. The proverbial clap of thunder out of a clear sky would have caused much less surprise and have done much less damage than did the unhappy combination of a pitcher who was losing control of the situation and an infield that gave no assistance. Michigan made three runs in the seventh and five in the eighth, making the score 11-10. McCloskey was sent in to do the pitching in the ninth, the team recovered their nerve and Michigan failed to score, leaving the score 10-11 in Oberlin's favor.

OBERLIN-MICHIGAN GAME—THIRD INNING.

Oberlin lost her second State game to Delaware, when a combination of two errors by Oberlin and two hits by Delaware resulted in four runs. Both teams scored in the fourth, making the score, Delaware 5, Oberlin 1, which was also the final result. The same number of hits, six, and errors, three, were credited to each team. Eleven Delaware men were retired on strikes by Tenney.

The Western trip made by the team will be remembered as the most disastrous ever made by an Oberlin team. All three games were lost, Hotchkiss was brought home on a stretcher with both bones in his left leg broken, and Manager Grabill was left in Chicago under the care of a physician.

The University of Illinois was the first team met. Oberlin started the game with a rush, driving one Illinois pitcher out of the box and scoring five runs. Illinois failed to score. In the second inning with no one out and two Oberlin men on bases, Hotchkiss suffered a broken leg, resulting from a collision with two Illinois men who were attempting to field his bunt. Oberlin lost confidence and the game, which at the beginning promised to be a very exciting one, became a very uneven contest, resulting in a score of Illinois 20, Oberlin 6. The Chicago game was a farce, played on a dark, cold, disagreeable day. Heavy batting, poor fielding and disgusting pitching left the result, Chicago 25, Oberlin 11. Sixteen bases on balls and three wild pitches by the Oberlin pitchers were the most remarkable features of the game. O. S. U. was met the next day at Columbus. Oberlin showed a great reversal in form from that displayed in the other games on the trip and played one of the best games of the season. Tenney pitched a strong game, allowing State but four hits. The final score was State 3, Oberlin 2. Marshall, the O. S. U. pitcher, struck out sixteen men. A second game was won by Case, Oberlin again bunching her errors with Case's hits so as to give her five runs on three hits, while she was able to score but twice.

The last defeat was administered by the Alumni by a score of 2-11.

Hoopes and Reed were the two most reliable hitters on the team. They could usually be relied upon when a hit was needed.

Shepler was the best of the regular men in fielding his position. He repeatedly made brilliant stops of low balls thrown by the infielders. This was especially noticeable on the Western trip.

Oberlin just missed having a most excellent team—one that could be classed with the '97 and '99 teams. The accident to Hotchkiss weakened the team greatly. Oberlin was very unfortunate in making errors when they would do the most harm. With a little better baseball luck the championship might have come to Oberlin.

Track Athletics

Season of 1903

RENEWED interest and enthusiasm for track and field athletics was seen throughout the State during the past year. Besides numerous dual meets there was planned and carried out a meet of all the colleges in the Ohio conference. The meet was held in Cleveland on May 28th. A permanent organization was at that time effected and plans perfected for holding a contest every year in Cleveland. If the beginning is any omen of the future, the meet bids well to rival in interest the championship contests in other lines of sport.

Oberlin during the past few years has been holding dual meets, but last spring track athletics were given a more prominent place. Late in the winter funds were raised to employ a track coach and trainer. Dr. A. H. Young, O. C., '97, was selected for the position and to him was due much of the season's successes.

As is her custom, Oberlin began her track season by holding a local field day. Several weeks previous to this a large squad of men had been busily engaged in training for the various events and it was possible to see that new records were to be made. In the field day events L. T. Dillon of the Conservatory, who more than any other member of the team attracted public attention, equaled the record for the 100-yard dash of ten seconds made by E. H. Boothman, May, 1894, and which had never been equaled except by himself. G. F. Hammond broke the pole vault record of 10 feet 6 inches made by J. M. Davis in the spring of 1899, and S. F. Bellows made a record of 5 feet 10½ inches for the high jump, breaking the previous best performance of 5 feet 9 inches, made by H. K. Regal in 1892. That these records, which had stood for years, should be broken at a home meet, when it was not expected that the men would work themselves to the limit of their ability, at once brought the team favorably before the students and did much to arouse the enthusiasm which was later shown in that branch of athletics.

The first dual meet was with Ohio State University at Columbus, May 9th. In this meet Oberlin won twelve firsts out of fifteen, winning all but the 220-yard hurdle, 16-pound shot and discus. Oberlin also won eight seconds, a total of 84 points to Columbus' 33. The most remarkable performance of this meet was the time made in the half-mile run of $1:59\frac{3}{8}$ by F. C. Kellogg, of Oberlin, which not only broke all previous records in the State in that event, but equaled the Western intercollegiate time for the half mile. Anderson broke the Oberlin record for the mile run by winning the event in $4:39\frac{1}{2}$. The previous best time had been made by McDaniels in the spring of 1901. Berryman lowered his own best time for the two-mile run to 10 min. $24\frac{2}{3}$ sec.

On May 16 Oberlin met Reserve in Cleveland and won thirteen firsts and nine seconds, losing first place in the hammer and tying in the 220-yard hurdles. The final score was $87\frac{1}{2}$ points for Oberlin and $15\frac{1}{2}$ for Reserve. There were no records broken in this meet. Oberlin was content to win with the least possible effort. The records made were the poorest of the year.

In previous years Oberlin had lost to Purdue by large scores. The Purdue meet for 1903, which was held in Oberlin, was awaited with much interest and expectancy. The result was a tie, each team winning fifty-six points. Oberlin gained first place in 100, 220 and 440-yard dashes, the two-mile run, 120-yard hurdle, pole vault, and high jump. Several new records were made and others equaled. Dillon was forced to run the 100 yards in ten seconds and a little later the 440 yards in $52\frac{1}{8}$ seconds, lowering the previous record held by Woodruff by $\frac{1}{8}$ of a second. W. K. Van Cleef clipped $\frac{1}{8}$ of a second off the record made in the spring of 1894 by Keep on the 120-yard hurdles, making the record $16\frac{3}{8}$ seconds. P. D. Hillis put the shot 38 feet $4\frac{2}{3}$ inches, but lost to Miller of Purdue, who put it 40 feet $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches. The previous record, 38 feet $\frac{1}{4}$ inch, was made in 1892. In the meet, three new records were made and one old one equaled.

The crowning work of the team was the winning of the State championship in the meet held in Cleveland, May 28th, when all the colleges in the State conference were represented.

The general summary of the meet was as follows:

	1st	2nd	3rd	4th	Totals
Oberlin	5 $\frac{2}{3}$	9 $\frac{2}{3}$	4 $\frac{2}{3}$	4	70 $\frac{2}{3}$
Case	6 $\frac{1}{3}$	2 $\frac{1}{3}$	4 $\frac{1}{3}$	2	49 $\frac{1}{3}$
O. S. U.....	3	2	2	3	28
O. W. U.....	0	0	1	0	2
W. R. U.....	0	1	2	3	10
Kenyon	0	0	1	2	4

The Oberlin men in the meet established new records in the two-mile. Berryman ran the race in 10 minutes 15 seconds.

W. K. Van Cleef equaled the record in 120-yard hurdles.

During the season new records were made in 440 by Dillon, time 52 $\frac{4}{5}$. Half mile, Kellogg, 1:59 $\frac{3}{5}$. One mile, Anderson, 4:39 $\frac{1}{5}$. Two mile, Berryman, 10 min. 15 sec. 120-yard hurdle, W. K. Van Cleef, 16 $\frac{2}{5}$. Pole vault, Hammond, 10 feet 6 $\frac{1}{4}$ inches. Shot put, Hillis, 38 feet 4 $\frac{2}{5}$ inches. High jump, Bellows, 5 feet 10 $\frac{1}{2}$ inches. Relay in O. S. U. meet, 3:33 $\frac{1}{5}$, Anderson, Dillon, Miller and Paterson.

Dillon ran the hundred yards on several occasions in the record time of ten seconds.

In all, nine new records were made and one tied. It was a very remarkable showing, and marks the team as the strongest ever put out by Oberlin.

and they played excellently in all our games.

There was a hard fight between several men for the center position. Olmstead, because of his greater knowledge and experience in the game, finally won the position. Morrison, a freshman, was selected as one guard, and well did he prove the wisdom of the choice. Captain Brown, who had in the previous season played forward, was shifted to a guard position and after he had become familiar with the position made an excellent man to defend the goal.

THE second varsity basket ball season was a much more successful one in every particular than was the first. From the very beginning every indication pointed to a strong team. The chief difficulty in the winning of the championship lay in the arrangement of the hard schedule. The first five games were scheduled to be played away from home. If Oberlin were successful in these games there seemed little doubt but that she would be able to take care of the games played on her own floor.

About thirty candidates tried for the team, among which number were four players from last year's team, three forwards and a center. The guards had graduated with the exception of Vradenberg, who wisely thought best not to play with the varsity team.

Captain Brown called the men out for light work early in November and kept them working steadily until the holiday vacation. By that time the number of candidates had been cut down to about a dozen men. Soon after the vacation the team was selected. Hoopes and Sandberg had shown from the very start that they excelled all others in their ability to throw baskets, so they were selected as forwards,

The players were, as a whole, fast and active, sure passers and good goal throwers. In her games away from home Oberlin suffered from the greatest fault of the game,—the lack of a regulation court. This, in a large measure, accounts for her early defeats, as it may also account in some degree for the ease with which she won her home games against teams which were trying to find themselves and the baskets upon Oberlin's large court.

courteous treatment that was to characterize her reception at all out of town games.

The next game was with Allegheny at Meadville, Pa. The floor was a good one, being somewhat larger than half of the Oberlin floor. The varsity, as few teams are, were no match for the large and skilled players who represented Allegheny. The game was lost, 18-57.

The first game with Columbus came but a few days after the Christmas vacation. The score, Oberlin 46, State 57, shows how well and at the same time how poorly both teams played. The Columbus floor furnished the strangest variety in the shape and size of a basket ball court that Oberlin played on during the season. The baskets were hung on the long side instead of the ends of the floor. The screens were a combination of rather loose screen at the top and solid board at the bottom extending half way up. While in the middle, where board and screen met, extending out some three inches, was a ledge, which made the ball clear the basket nicely, when a player attempted to shoot the ball up the screen. When the ball was thrown in such a manner that it would have rolled down the screen into the basket, it would strike that ledge and bounce safely over the basket. It was a peculiar arrangement, but it protected the baskets much better than any of the other guards could do. It certainly tested the skill of any player to throw a basket, when he had been accustomed to a good screen. The game was very exciting and was characterized by difficult and remarkable shots. The guards on both sides seemed to be utterly unable to follow their men. Oberlin received the same

The next night Oberlin lost to Hiram, 14-29. It was necessary to play with two substitutes in the game. Captain Brown and Morrison were both too sick to play. The game was exciting from first to last and Hiram won because of her greater familiarity with the floor.

The first game on the home floor was with Allegheny. Oberlin played one of her best games and had a slight advantage during the first half, but the score was exceedingly close. In the second half, during the last few minutes of play, Allegheny secured several baskets and the game, 20-29. The team play on both sides was excellent, few free shots being allowed by the guards. The student body was highly pleased at the showing of the team in this game and showed much enthusiasm during the remainder of the season.

Our first victory was at Cleveland when we won a close and exciting contest from Reserve. Oberlin's experience gained by playing on small floors stood her in good stead. It was only by the hardest kind of work that the game was saved by a score of 25-16.

Next to the Allegheny game, the most satisfactory game of the year was with Syracuse at Oberlin. Syracuse came with a record of many victories won from the largest Eastern schools. Oberlin won the game, 27-12. The large floor was a handicap to the Syracuse men, who were not in the best of condition. The basket shooting of the Oberlin forwards was excellent. The Syracuse guards were not able to effectually cover the forwards when the ball was cleverly worked down to them by guards and center. At the same time the Syracuse team was able to secure but three goals, so closely were they guarded.

As had been expected, Oberlin won from O. S. U., 38-16. Oberlin had struck her pace and was playing a strong game. In this game Hoopes made a record for himself as a thrower of baskets from fouls. Oberlin clearly outplayed and outclassed Columbus in this game, which virtually gave to Oberlin the championship of the Big Six.

Thirty-nine-thirteen was the score of the last contest with Reserve, which completed the season's schedule. Reserve was completely at a loss on the large floor and Oberlin won at will in a poorly played game.

There is no doubt but that Oberlin had by far the strongest team of any of the colleges in the conference. Hiram, we believe, would have been defeated in a game played on our own floor. As the records stand, Hiram must be regarded as State champion. The playing of the team was in every way an improvement over the first varsity team. The championship should be won next year. All of the old men with the exception of Captain Brown will be in school again. The games were justly popular and this interest was shown by the large attendance at the games.

Foot Ball

The season in football produced the most interesting series of games that we have had in several years. The teams were all strong. From the men who represented the classes on the gridiron, an all class team could be selected that, with a little practice together, could easily have defeated all the college teams in the State with three exceptions, and even for those three they would have furnished an interesting contest. It is seldom that such strong players as ex-Captain Hillis, Ewing, Morrill and others are seen on a class team. In fact, much of Oberlin's best material was found upon the class teams, because of the eligibility rules which prevented their playing on 'varsity.

The greatest criticism to be passed upon the class season, and one that seems to be becoming more evident each year, was the failure of the players to get into good physical condition for the contests. This was woefully evident in many of the games. There is a growing dislike on the part of the class men to go to the field for scrimmage practice, contenting themselves with a few minutes signal practice on the gymnasium floor in the evening. It must be said that while as a team little actual practice was taken, many individual players were faithful workers on the scrubs.

The contests were hard fought. At times dashes of team play appeared which would have done credit to many a college team and showed what a little more faithfulness in practice would have done. The games were, however, often won by the team which showed the least exhaustion rather than the superior quality of the football played.

The experience gained on the class teams will be of great value to the men who try for next year's 'varsity.

Base Ball

BASE ball next to basket ball is the most popular of all class athletics. Much interest was shown last year in the sport, not only by the players but by all members of the various classes.

The greatest weakness in the class teams was in the pitching and catching department. This is not difficult to explain. Every man who was at all proficient in those positions were kept working on the 'varsity squad in an endeavor to strengthen that team.

Heebner and Clark clearly surpassed the other class batteries. In fact, they alone could be classed as a battery.

It would be an unusual occurrence in other schools for a Senior team to win a class championship, for in but few schools is there enough interest in class athletics to induce the upper class to put out teams. And yet our last base ball and foot ball series were both won by Seniors. The Seniors won the championship through their battery.

The class teams are of considerable assistance in bringing out and developing new material.

Class championship—1903.

Basket Ball

OBERLIN is more fortunate in her class athletics than are most schools. In all branches of athletics the class interest is by no means small.

No athletic contests are held in greater regard by the class teams than the basket ball games. The interest in the game seems to be increasing. Sixty would be a conservative estimate of the number of candidates for the four class teams. More time was given for practice than in any other branch of sport. In the development of individual play, team play was not lost sight of. More skill was shown in basket ball than in either base ball or foot ball.

The Sophomore class undoubtedly had the strongest team and deserved to win the series. They excelled in team and individual play and played by far the steadiest game of all the classes.

The attendance at the games, which were played Monday mornings, was always large and enthusiastic.

It was pleasing to note that a large number of men played basket ball, who made no pretense of taking part in other branches of athletics. Let us hope that this will always be true.

Academy Athletics

COACH REED.

THE first year of independent Academy athletics has been completed and it may be well to review briefly the entire year and to see whether the change is accomplishing what was desired. During the year the Academy has put three teams in the field—football, baseball, and basketball. Such schools as the Cleveland high schools and University School, Rayen High, Detroit University School, and Kenyon Military Academy, have been met and one baseball and one football game have been lost. A tie game of football was played. All the others were won by the Academy and have helped more than anything else could have done to give us a place among the secondary schools of the Middle West. Another year will bring less difficulty in securing satisfactory schedules.

We must, then, regard the year as satisfactory in the main as far as success is concerned. It is almost too early to speak of the Academy teams in their influence on the 'Varsity, but the next year or two can scarcely fail to give the college a number of athletes who are not alone skilful in playing the different games, but, what is almost more important, trained in team play, in self-reliance and in meeting critical situations. Such men are Conkey, Allen, Fulton, Ward and Sandberg in baseball; Houser, Blevins, Thompson, Leasenhop, and Baird, in football; the entire basketball team, and Jaten and Vradenberg in all three. Thus, although time is needful to entirely prove the wisdom of the present arrangement, it requires no gift of prophecy to foresee the certain benefits which our entire athletic life is to gain from Academy athletics.

Gymnasium and Field Ass'n

AMONG the women of the college, there has long been need of an organization to promote systematic outdoor exercise. As a step toward this the Women's Gymnasium Committee obtained permission from the trustees to raise five thousand dollars to buy and equip a field. The women of the faculty, and the women of the college, have pledged generously toward this sum, and thirteen hundred dollars have been paid in, and deposited in the college treasury, but the opportunity to give five thousand dollars, and name the field, is still open to some interested and generous individual.

With so much accomplished toward securing a field, it seemed advisable to form an association; accordingly the necessary meetings were called, and a constitution and by-laws adopted. The object of the association is (a) "To promote interest in the gymnasium and in outdoor sports, as a means of securing the recreation, physical development, and health of its members; and, (b) to provide and equip a suitable field for outdoor sports." All the members of the Women's Department, and all the women of the faculty, are eligible for membership. There are three kinds of members: Life members, who give ten dollars or more to the Association; resident members, who give five dollars; and year members, who pay a yearly due of one dollar.

The Officers for the present year are:

NELLIE GRACE MOORE, President.
ANNA BEATRICE DOERSCHUK, Vice President.
CLARIBEL AMENT LEGGAT, Secretary.
DR. HANNA, Director and Treasurer.

The Class Members are:

Seniors—CLARA VIRGINIA JONES.
Juniors—ANNA WOODBURY McDANIELS.
Sophomores—FRANCES ELIZABETH JONES.
Freshmen—ELLA CHARLTON FULTON.
Academy—FLORENCE STOREY.
Conservatory—ALICE CARRINGTON.

The present membership is 51 life, 45 resident, and 100 year members, a number which will be largely increased as soon as the tennis and basket ball season opens. The privileges that it is now possible to offer are: the use of the Rockefeller skating floor; the tennis and the basket ball courts; and the cross country walks, for nature study. The constitution provides that all these sports shall be carefully supervised by the Director of the Women's Gymnasium. The first event of the Association was a Skating Contest in which the women of the four college classes, of the Academy, and of the Conservatory participated, the championship being won by the Sophomores.

The Association hopes that it will not be long before the balance of the money is raised, and the field purchased, as this would enable the Association to carry out its plans for broadening its work, and would mean added health and happiness to the thousand women who are here, and the thousands who are to come.

THE ARBORETUM.

In Amore Multi Sunt Ascensus

AS THE lad tramped morosely across the grass toward the wood-bordered road beyond the most distant faculty's house he descried a girl standing at the edge of the circular pond this side of the trees. She was bending forward, he observed, her right arm swung back in the act of tossing something to the sun-illuminated water.

He was out of patience with woman-kind. "Of all fool occupations," he remarked sharply to himself, "that of feeding those idiotic fish is the most maudlin." Still as he drew nearer he was pricked into a mild glow of interest to observe that in place of this womanish occupation she was with an unfeminine degree of skill and energy skipping pebbles. Moreover as he came within hearing distance, the place was quiet and windless, he caught the flat plump of a choleric pebble that forced an exasperated "darn." He abominated slangy girls but a new view of this example suggested the possibility of an exception. Sturdy and hatless, clothed primarily for a career of action, she was nevertheless a pretty-seeming person and when she turned her head he observed how sweet and round was her flushed face. She nodded an easy, "How d'y" to him, whereupon he grinned an amiable challenge, "I can beat that last," he called. His face was very attractive when he smiled, the boyishness flashing out genially. "What'll you bet?" she took him up with no hesitation. For reply he picked out a smooth, roundish, flat little stone from the heap collected by her right foot, drew his arm back and flipped the pebble neatly into the water. Glancing from the surface as the rippling circles widened, it dipped again, rose, and a third time, stirring the water where it splashed into far-spreading rings, sank from sight. The girl followed with business-like expedition, but luck failed her. Her stone skipped once and when it landed flatly disappeared. She turned promptly. "How are you classed?"

"Senior," he volunteered. "You are——?"

"Freshman," she sent one after another of the remaining pebbles flying to join the fishes. "Queer for a Senior to know things."

"What kind of things?"

She measured him for a second. "I could beat you climbing trees."

"Taken. There's an apple orchard over here a ways. We can begin on something easy."

Thus established in fellowship they struck off down the sloping banks into rustling woods. Their dialogue smacked of congenial interests. From exploits of pluck and vim they passed, as they came out upon the deep-rutted road, to matters of deeper import. Having reached the topic, "girls," they ignored from that moment all other paths of analytic research. Man-to-man they jeered and taunted the genus feminine, probed into her want of information upon vital things, scored her shortsightedness, laughed at her uselessness, hit off her lack of attractiveness for the discerning. Just after they had crawled under the last barbed wire fence intervening between them and a certain red-fruited tree, she gave him a sidelong glance from her bright eyes. "I don't usually disclose the tragedy of my life to strangers," she remarked gravely, but somehow there's no stiffness about you."

"I'll trade stories," he followed unreservedly.

"There's a girl in mine."

"And in mine."

"She isn't my girl. They're all alike. It's a case of a step-mother. I won't have one bothering around. It gives me a grouch to think of it. She'd want everything changed, salad-course for dinner and curtains all over the place, people in the nicest spring-afternoons for tea."

He munched an apple in sympathetic wordlessness.

"What's the trouble with you?"

"Well, you see, it's a little different." He grew somewhat red and apologetic. "I'm—Well, the truth of the matter is, I want to marry a girl and she's thrown me over."

"Some other man?"

"I'm afraid so. Besides it'll be years before my money's my own. I'm here in college through the kindness of a certain man who was a friend of my father's. Want a boost?"

"No thanks." A swish of falling leaves, a patter of apples shaken to the ground were followed by a low whistle of delight. "Come on up," she urged from above, "but you can't pass me." Whereupon he swung himself into the tree and clambered from branch to branch up the broad, spreading trunk. Already far out on the end of a slender limb, she swayed there laughing, while he rested in defeat at the comfortable fork of two substantial limbs. So placed they went on with their conversation, while the wind brushed through the sunny bronzed leaves, and the world lay in the still, soft of a September afternoon. This is the time that friends find best of all the year.

"I know a Senior," the girl confessed later. "She is tall and rather grand. Her name is Gentry."

"It's getting too cool for arboreal habits," he returned. We'd better descend.

As they turned up the main street together, both silent since each disdained the feminine artifice of unnecessary speech, they met a tall, dark-haired girl. Her brown eyes widened a bit as she smiled cordially at the two, each of whom, when she had passed, glanced surreptitiously at the other.

The lad having rather summarily parted with his companion loafed over to the library where he had the not unforeseen fortune to fall in with the tall, brown-eyed girl. Taking her books he made some introductory remarks about the next football game. Because he did not himself mention his rival of the afternoon he regarded her with suspicion when she said evenly, "Now that's what I call a nice girl, Dickie. Next time you get angry with me, just invite her places and I needn't feel unhappy again."

"She's slangy and perverse," he retorted.

The tall girl turned her head and smiled at him from under her lashes.

"Any fellow would act sulky, if that's what you mean, when a girl turns him down five times in regular succession."

"Now, Dick, there's no use in discussing that again. We've gone over the whole ground thoroughly too many times."

"Watch out for that board," he cautioned abruptly. A thin plank had been thrown across a hole washed out in the cinder path, and he set his foot upon the end of it, intending to steady it as she crossed. Instead the board flew up, she stepped, stepped off and went down before he could catch her.

"I'm not hurt," she protested, as, in indignant misery, he brushed off her skirt with his handkerchief and called himself "blockhead" and "brute." Nevertheless when he closed the doors of her house after her he felt convinced that she was suffering.

The next morning he was hanging about with the air of a mediaeval penitent when the double doors opened with a clang and his companion of the afternoon before came down the steps. They hailed each other gloomily, somewhat suspiciously, but as her errand was fairly unmistakable he swallowed his pride sufficiently to ask if by chance she had seen Miss Gentry. "Yes," she acknowledged as he fell into step beside her. "It's a pretty bad sprain, but she has grit. I can't stand to be quiet."

He met the Freshman several times after that coming out of the house, and once it occurred to him that he had never inquired her name. "Awkward if anybody should ask," he thought, "and she seems like a nice sort of girl." Then he smiled, considering how guilty each looked at these contretemps on the heels of their conversation concerning girls.

That very afternoon as he was about to enter she came dashing down the steps and passed him with barely a nod. He started to call after her but thought better of it, perceiving that she wanted no companionship. A queer hurt feeling passed over him. It was too unlike a girl to take things alone, whatever this might be. "Perhaps it's a real turn-down," he thought whimsically."

The note the maid gave him brought the cheerfulness back to his face. Half-smiling to himself he put his hand on the handle of the outer doors as a man on the other side lifted the latch at the same instant. He stepped back to admit the other, a stranger from his travelling-case and from the indicative air of dispatch with which he pushed the bell. But the newcomer catching a glimpse of him broke into a hearty exclamation of delight. "If it isn't the Lad," he cried, dropping his baggage to hold out two cordial hands.

"Mr. Le Conte, You!" The Lad gripped the hands beaming pleasure. "When did you come?"

"Just now—an unexpected—privilege. And, is this where she lives?"

"Who?"

"Molly wrote me something about you, oh, a week ago. She found out your name and most of your history, except my role as tyrannical guardian whose penuriousness should prevent you from marrying the girl of your heart. There's a strain of the sentimental in women, even in Molly."

The Lad had scarcely got his lips together for a reply when the maid came. Mr. Le Conte took out a card and gave it to her, speaking a name that sounded familiar. He was a tall, erect, smooth-faced man, with greyish hair and a keen, genial way of looking at you through his eye-glasses, not in the slightest disagreeably, yet the Lad did not feel like asking him if he were well acquainted with Miss Gentry. For some reason he was at a loss. Le Conte's daughter writing of him, Dick Stanhope? She must be still a small child. He murmured something indistinctly.

"Going?" asked the older man, putting his arm affectionately around his shoulder. "I don't see you often enough to realize what a great fellow you grow to be. But you'll dine with me? at say, six-thirty, wherever you like. We have something to talk over. You aren't the best of correspondents, Lad! That's Mac all over again."

He heard a rustle on the stairs. Something stuck fast in Dick's throat. It was she and suddenly there pulsed through him a dizzying comprehension. He stared at the other man an instant. "Is it all right if I come back about six?" he asked and then he turned and went out.

Through the dusky, whispering woods, where the frogs were croaking in some pond and the coolness of the early fall twilight crept upon him, the Lad wandered back home. The boyish melancholy with the boyish cheer had left his heart. There was no doubt. He saw how it lay with all of them, with the little Tomboy, with the tall brown-eyed girl, with the genial kindly man, with himself. A green—shrouded walnut bounced down upon his shoulder and he looked up mechanically. There clung a girl, far up the straight blackish trunk of a walnut tree. He was startled into wrath. "Come down," he ordered, abruptly. "No fellow can stand things out alone. Climb down to the lowest branch and jump. I'll catch you."

Submissive, quiet she crept from limb to limb and gathered her skirts together for the spring. He, braced against the next tree, caught her firmly and when he had set her down she looked at him in gratitude.

"Well?" he demanded.

"It's the last time," she said, and her voice was husky. "They came out here walking, Dad and Elizabeth. I was—I happened to overhear. She told him I was a little devil, only politer. Seems she meant to win me over. That's why Dad sent me here. I wasn't to know who she was. Well, strange enough for a girl, she came to see it wasn't fair. We, she and I, talked it over. I like to be trusted, square and straight, and this was a—trick. She told Dad she couldn't stand it, to make me miserable, you know, not angry, but awfully cut up. Dad couldn't budge her. Of course you know what you'd do yourself. I climbed down and explained that I honestly didn't want her to mind about me. Dad must be happy and besides—" she looked at him unflinchingly, though her voice was very low. "I love her."

The Lad's lips quivered once, but he made no answer.

Winter Twilight

The still calm winter twilight lies around
Like reminiscence of a bygone time
When all was tolerant and true; man's prime Offense had not yet stained the holy ground
God gave him, nor had unharmonious sound
Been taught him by the skilled perceptress Crime,
But his own soul unhampered and sublime
Knew that lost peace no later age has found.
Sweet hour of unremembered pureness stay,
Lie broad and cool upon our fevered brows
Until thou hast by soothing purged away
The soon-forgotten evil of the day
And left our wearied souls beneath the boughs
Of olive trees whose evening shade is gray.

Pictures of Memory

Among the beautiful pictures
That hang on memory's wall
Is one of a room in Baldwin
That seemeth the best of all.
Not for its air of comfort
Bidding each comer stay,
Not for the sounds of laughter
That brightened the tasks of day.

Not for the coffee and rarebit,
Nor many another treat,
Not for the tea and wafers
Dispensed by a hostess sweet,
Not for the cosey pillows,
A very haven of rest,
Not for its odor of flowers
It seemeth to me the best.

For there in the evening twilight
Our talk was gentle and low,
Binding with cords yet closer
The friendships of long ago.
Therefore of all the pictures
That hang on Memory's wall,
That one of a room in Baldwin
Seemeth the best of all.

The Worship Restored

NOT so far away from you or from me as we are disposed to think, fellow townsman, is a place of seclusion, a retreat where one may exchange his usual mood and occupations for that indefinable something that is commonly sought for nowadays in the distant wilderness, where its overwhelming presence masters the imagination, intoxicates the spirit, and wins back the soul to a worship he must ever after yearn to renew, and whose shrines he will ever be seeking.

Time and circumstance may aid him in the search. A spot that is but indifferently favorable to the worship may be transformed by dusk and stillness, till it seems charged with the true spirit of the wild, lifted out of and above the level of the merely picturesque, till its scenery becomes the architecture and its sound the music of nature's cathedral-worship. Such a time and place was found by a friend of ours, toward the close of this vigorous winter of 1903-4. The time was evening of a bleak day in February; the place may be had for the finding.

All through the preliminary motions—the choosing of a halting place, the gathering of fuel—it had been a matter of faith, and groping. But with the kindling of the blaze came the needed touch, the reanimation, the nature-worship restored. With that token the sense of it woke full and strong, and with the old delight. For, face it boldly as you may—this cold hospitality of the winter season—there is joy in that friendly ally and companion, the campfire.

The man and his fire—a center of humanity and good cheer; a safe starting point for fanciful excursions in the places of awe and wonder that the real, untamed world was meant to suggest, and that our comfortable arts and improvements have so driven from our habitual regard. To be by the glowing hearth within doors, and to hear the winter storms without, means much; but here the contrast comes closer still; a little circle of warmth by the blaze; then, beyond the zone of its gleaming, beyond that immediate pall of blackness out of which a few tree-trunks, reclaimed by the firelight, lean kindly, is desolation indeed. Gloom, whiteness swallowed up of gloom, and one great note of cheerlessness in all. Woods that are voiceless, unlighted, but by the snow ; barren fields, blown, not breathed on, by inclement winds ; where you looked for shelter, a brooding cold. Life, that used to animate it all, is shrivelled away in the dry leaf, or shrinks away into holes and crannies, with small furred creatures. One must be of this sort to escape the numbing chill and darkness.

He left this circle of firelight and went to the edge of the steep, near by, where he could look out over the tops of the hemlocks to a frozen precipice, across a little valley ; stood and listened to the sound of water coming up from the depth of the gorge—to the river's voice, that mysterious undertone that held him always, wherever heard ; that carried him now to other scenes and other times ; to a valley, and mountains, and a river, of his childhood, that now he saw and heard afresh, under the magic of that dream voice. But these he saw in clear daylight : hillsides summer clad, high, bare-shouldered ridges, habited of tonic winds ; and in the cleft between them the stream with stainless current, light rushing over its rocky bed ; and ever sounding in his ears that still, far-heard undertone. These, and not the ice and darkness become reality for him.

Back again to his center of cheer, the campfire, he turned his step and his devotions. For there, stretched on a bed of hemlock, a man may well woe the spirit of reverie, while the sparks sped upward in a fatal sport till the heart of the blaze grows old and falls adoze.

German Translations

Translation from Heine

When I on my couch am lying,
Am wrapped in slumber and night,
Before me floats a vision,
Lovely and fair and bright.

And when reposeful slumber
My eyelids almost steeps,
Deep into my drowsy dreamings
The vision gently creeps.

Yet with the dream of morning
It does not melt away,
For in my heart I carry
Its brightness all the day.

Translation from Uhland

"Lob des Frühlings."

Fields of green, violet scent,
Trill of lark and blackbird's lay,
Sunny show'rs, soft breezes sent!
When in words like these I'm singing,
Greater things need I be bringing Thee to honor, thou Spring day?

"Frühlingsruhe."

O, lay me not in the cheerless tomb,
Not far down under the green earth in bloom!
If in the grave I sleep,
Fain would I lie 'mong grasses deep.
I'd lie where flowers and grasses are
When there sounds a flute from afar,
And when high in the sky,
The light spring clouds go floating by.

SEVERANCE LABORATORY.

The Salvation of Helena

MRS. Thomas O'Hooligan had just seen her one son safely packed off with Miss Molly, the Mission lady, for a week's fresh air, and now she was heaving a series of sighs of relief and unhesitatingly expressing her emotions to her friend, Mrs. Casey, over the steaming wash-tub. Mrs. Casey paid little or no attention, for Mrs. O'Hooligan's sentiments in regard to her offspring were well known, and furthermore, the whole tenement held exactly the same opinions.

"'Tis a limb of Satan he is," Mrs. O'Hooligan was declaiming. "Oi've no manner of patience wid him, and Oi'm glad enough to be shut av him fer wan while, though the saints know it's harrd fer thim as has for a wake. Oi've give him wan good hidin' ivery day since Oi knowed he was goin', against his cuttin' up any av his shines, an' Oi've tould him he'd better moind hisself, bekase the spirits warns me ivery toime he's gettin limber, and if he ain't dacint, Oi'll come out afther him and it's the very daylights he'll get shook out av him, that he will."

Mrs. O'Hooligan was a staunch follower of spiritualism, one of the most faithful and devout attendants at the Miller street church, and her faith had been a bitter cross to her son,—a chastisement to the flesh, but undoubtedly a rich treasure to his soul. It was her firm belief that the spirits told her of the misdeeds of her child when he was away from the maternal roof, and directed her to pursue and reprehend the culprit; and, inasmuch as the youthful O'Hooligan was practically always in mischief, the spirits seldom misled her.

"Ah, yes," she repeated, straightening up that her words might be the more impressive. "If I sense any av his tomfoolery, Oi'll lick the little angel face off'n him, thet darlint."

* * * * *

At the immaculate parsonage on the outskirts of the quiet village of Meriden, the arrival of the white-faced little stranger-child from Boston was a wonderful thing to the Rector's spotless daughter, Helena. She was a lonely child, and queer,—undeniably queer, in the eyes of the ladies of her father's church, who nodded and whispered when she was mentioned; in the eyes of the school-children of her own age, who refused to play with her and called her stuck up because her mother sent her to a private teacher; and, alas, queer even in the eyes of her father and mother, who failed to understand her and always said: "Run away now and amuse yourself. I am so busy." If they only knew how it broke the poor little six-year-old heart to be turned away when she was lonely and wanted sympathy! Mother was always so busy, for, as Helena had heard some of the ladies say, she was an ideal Rector's wife, and was the prime mover of such numberless literary bands and mission circles, and mothers' meetings, that she really had no time to look after Helena between meals. Because she had no playmate to free her imprisoned imagination, the child had fallen into the way of sitting on the porch steps all alone to pass the hours, her small face resting on her two palms, and her wide eyes gazing off into the deep mysterious sky, until the great hollow place in her heart, where mother-love should have been, filled with most unchildlike and unhealthy thoughts. The loneliness was most oppressive during the long twilight evenings before her bedtime as she would watch the darkness swallow up the low red line of daylight on the horizon, for then the air would be peopled with strange, sighing shadows that whispered all manner of horrid things in her ears, and the cool night wind that teased the poplars along the neat gravel walk terrified her with their murmuring. How she hated those voices,—and they were in her ears not only in the evening, now, but sometimes all day long, and even in her sleep at night. In her loneliness and fear she would cry quietly, longing to nestle in some one's arms and tell out her story, and to be held close and kissed and comforted. She was a wonderfully good little maid,—so neat, so terribly truthful, so wholly exemplary in deportment,—and yet it had been better for her if the mother had taken her into the house on those long, dusky, desolate evenings and spanked her soundly: Helena had never been spanked, for she had never deserved it; but in lieu of other motherly attentions, she needed it exceedingly.

But now for a whole week she was not to be alone with the shadows and the whispers. She had trembled lest mother should think the new fresh air boy so far lacking in respectability as to be no fit companion for her daintily arrayed self; but the little Frederick (O'Hooligan was discarded for aesthetic purposes) was so white of face, so chary of word, so unspeakably angelic of expression, that mother had looked upon him with the eye of favor, and, bidding her give the boy a happy time, had gone to a meeting and left the children to themselves. Frederick was, in truth, a beautiful child,—a child from an idealized painting. Several untidy, long-haired artists in Boston had raved over him as he was shooting craps or puddling in the gutter for cigar-stumps, and had sketched him as an angel for the magnificent sum of fifty cents a day, until he had realized his value and raised on the price. But within his lovely head the thoughts were evil and his ways were ways of mystery.

Helena, in palpitating anxiety to conciliate him, led him about the place the morning after his arrival, showing him the flower beds, and the cow and the chickens, while Frederick the seraphic groaned inwardly:

"Golly, if this ain't de limit. She'll be showin' me her doll-babies yet."

At last they came to the back door-steps and some monster slices of bread and butter to munch as they sat side-by-side,—Frederick silent and most angelic, and Helena unutterably happy in companionship and freedom from the hateful wind-sounds.

"Perhaps you would like to play something," she suggested courteously, in her prim, New England way. "There are twenty-questions, and hop-scotch, and simon-says-thumbs-up—?"

Frederick's scorn was beyond words. He was eight years of age and his man's heart jeered within him; but he was a person of few words, preferring to work in silence but with dire effect. This girl was certainly a ninny, and he wished he had not come to this boy-forsaken place, but there was no hope for it, and at least his tingling small person was at a safe distance from his mother's heavy slipper of wrath.

"Did you ever play pirates?" he queried mildly.

"Oh my, pirates kill people: there is a piece about them in the prayer-book—don't you know?" murmured Helena, awestruck; then, remembering her manners: "But how do you play?"

"Well, yu' has ter have treasure, yu' kill somebody and gets it," Frederick explained, his brown eyes glowing as with a heavenly light. "Then yu' hides it and makes de parchment tellin' where 'tis, and yu' cut yer finger or somebody else's and signs it in blood. De blokes t' home got it outer Lightning Bill, or the Horror of the Molly Keene—Gee, 'jever read dat?"

"No, but I can read: I hav read Little Women and some adventure stories," put in Helena, fearful and yet fascinated, as has ever been the case when Innocence meets the Serpent. "We could make a parchment right away. I have a place on my finger where the cat bit it, and you may pinch that for the blood—it won't hurt much—I think. What else do you do, Frederick?"

"They'd ought ter be a lot o' fellers and dey has pirate names. Yu' kin call me by de name I has t' home. I'm Lightning Pete, the Bloody Avenger of the Spanish Main, I am, and you kin be Beautiful Sal, the Bane of the Gulch. She's an awful good-looker, but an awful bad cuss."

The Bloody Avenger drew up the parchment on a bit of paper, locating in mysterious figures a vast treasure, and swearing, by several crookedly-printed but hair-curling oaths, never to reveal its whereabouts, signed by himself and the Beautiful Sal. Poor lonely little Helena—her heart thrilled with joy and love for Frederick as she took this firm step out from the desolate path of rectitude into the friendly road that leads to the birch rod and the slipper. She was to have companionship for the infinity of a week, and with a gloriously devil-may-care expression, without hesitation or consideration, she threw truth, honour and obedience to the winds for this single jewel—she was Helena no longer, but Beautiful Sal, an awful bad cuss.

After the parchment, the treasure was to be thought of. The Bloody Avenger, as he preferred to be called, suggested that it ought to be expensive, for treasure always was: gold was the nicest, or precious stones, but rich robes made good treasure, too. Now Frederick had seen a certain huge package that had arrived that very morning at the rectory; had seen it proudly opened by the rector himself; had seen his look of satisfaction as he shook out the soft folds of a new and beautiful gown; and Evil was strong in the Avenger's angelic head. Great minds run in the same channel, especially if that channel be evil, and at the words "rich robes" Helena's eyes grew big with enthusiasm and comprehension.

"Father's new gown," whispered this poor child who had never done anything wicked in her barren little life. "It is under father's bed."

The Avenger was not one to let the grass grow under his feet.

"Yu' g'wan," he drawled. "Yu' gotter go and capture it from de old man—he's de foe—and I'll stay here and kill any mucker dat comes along."

Beautiful Sal, the Bane of the Gulch, willingly slunk off into the house. Her cheeks glowed and her small feet fairly bounded, partly, perhaps, in human satisfaction at being about to avenge father's numberless "Please-Helena-do-run-away-nows," but chiefly in the freedom of the exuberant child spirit that had so wofully long been pent up and alone. Under the bed in father's room rolled Sal's plump person, regardless of dust and damage to the painfully clean dress, and sneezing and flushed, she wriggled out again, dragging triumphantly the precious box. It was far larger than herself, and she began to thrill with the delightful danger that she might be seen struggling with her unwieldy burden; but mother was at a missionary meeting and father was away as usual, and anyway he was so short-sighted and absent-minded that he would only say, "Oh, do run away now," and forget all about it the next minute. The house was silent except for the swish of Bridget's sweeping up stairs, and in safety came Beautiful Sal with her treasure to the Bloody Avenger, who laconically reported two fierce foes slain in desperate combat.

With a few well-chosen excerpts from Lightning Bill, or the Horror of the Molly Keene, Beautiful Sal's ready but latent imagination was fired and then bountifully fed by her acquaintance with fairy and giant lore. The yard became a tumbling sea and the Avenger and herself sailors in a rocking galleon which they guided through the waves with terrified excitement as they scudded behind trees and dashed wildly across the cleared spaces, carrying the treasure to the barn—a desert and rocky island in mid-ocean. Even the Avenger, the unimpassioned, was pleased with her realistic treatment of the sea, and remarked that "Gosh, she was more of a fellar than he had taken her for." Up the barn stairs they scrambled, through the cobwebs and dusty hay of the almost unused loft, until Beautiful Sal's spotless raiment of afore-time was in wildest disorder. Her guimpe was ripped, one long black stocking hung down over her shoe-top, the other had a huge, three-cornered rent below the knee where she had caught it on a nail; her hair was flying and tangled, and her eyes were dancing with the pent-up impishness of years. The tiny spur of encouragement and companionship had roused her to see the jagged rocks and desolate canyons of the island, the naked savages and roaring beasts, as the two children-pirates stealthily crept to the far corner of the loft, where they buried the treasure deep in a rock-bound cave, guarded by lions and tigers. And there in the dusty gloom, the Avenger spoke in accents slow and gentle; told all the horror tales that run riot in the back streets of Boston among them that read the all-glorious dime novel, until Sal's blood leapt in her veins in sheer joy at the wickedness of her position.

"Golly," she whispered, in awed and admiring imitation.

Who can describe the happiness of the long, busy, glorious Saturday that followed? The outward semblance of things, to be sure, was simple enough, but the wild mystery and wealth of imagery, who but a child could understand? At night after her prayers were heedlessly said, Beautiful Sal lay awake, too happy to sleep in the remembrance of the day-long play with the dearest person in the world to her now, the wonderful Avenger. There was a certain river in the desert island which the uninitiated called the drain behind the barn, and this, as the Avenger (who, by the way, had a knowledge of the workings of drains) had suggested, offered an approach to the treasure by water and ought to be dammed up to ensure perfect safety. Beautiful Sal, despite her active imagination, had found herself rather too small for this truly Herculean task, and though she had worked busily, carrying stones and sticks and stuffing clay tightly into the cracks, she had grown very weary and had had to pause every little while to mop her dusty and perspiring brow with the only available handkerchief, her petticoat.

"Oh, dear, I wish I was about seven hundred feet high," she had sighed impatiently. And the Bloody Avenger had suggested that yeast made bread get big awful quick. With what visions of an elasticity parallel to that of Alice in Wonderland's she had managed to find the yeast." It was an adventure in itself—but such a pitiable fizzle." She had poured out a great cupful of the strong, home-made leaven and lifted it to her lips with trembling eagerness.

"What a nasty smell," she had thought to herself, with her lips on the brim. Then followed the heroic gulp and the crash of the cup on the stone floor of the cellar; her own involuntary shriek and the coming of the terrified Bridget to carry her limp little body upstairs. My, but she did have a stomach-ache—and she was not an inch bigger, not a tiny half-inch.

Then there had been the adventure of the cat, who was, had the world but known it, a hostile treasure ship. She had felt so very bad with her stomach-ache and all, that the Bloody Avenger had suggested, by way of solace, that she might go forth and do some conquering all alone. A huge treasure-ship was sighted and Sal had cast off in a dory to capture it or die. She had stealthily approached her prey, which had sailed with dignity into the parlor and ensconced itself in a lonely inlet under the sofa, and just as she had crawled after it and had seized it by one mast, mother had come into the parlor with callers. It was a position of imminent danger and demanded instant action ; she had given the protesting treasure-ship one jerk and had rolled herself under the sofa so as to effectually cover the prey with her valiant person. The callers had gabbled wonderfully fast and long, and the treasure-ship had fired off volley after volley, making a terrible, though muffled, commotion.

"At the last missionary meeting," Mrs. Wilson had just been saying when she broke off suddenly—"I really believe that your kitten is shut up somewhere." Then mother, and the caller-women, too, had hunted for the poor cat, and revelations had to be made, and there had been words, and a suppressed giggle from the hall-way, which must have come from the Bloody Avenger, but he had looked so heart-broken and cherubic—and Beautiful Sal's memories trailed off in dreams of the pale face and great soft eyes of Lightning Pete, the Bloody Avenger of the Spanish Main.

She was dressed for service early the next morning, and might easily have been mistaken for her old prim and immaculate self had it not been for a small gleam in her eye that was new and meant worlds. As she and the Avenger were sitting properly reading the Well-spring in the library while father and mother were dressing, however, she began to grow a little uncomfortable. This was really the first time she had paused since the coming of the Avenger ; the past two days had been such a giddy whirl of happiness and comradeship that her mind had been too full to consider consequences. Now she began to think on the doctrine of future punishment which the Avenger had taught her among other things, and to wonder just what father would do when he could not find his gown. She looked uneasily at the Avenger, who sat with hands folded piously on the Well-spring plotting mischief and listening with all his ears to certain sounds that were coming from father's room with ever-increasing distinctness. There was a puffing as of some one emerging from beneath a bed. Then :

"Where in the world is my new gown?" That was father. Father was a very positive man and one who made hasty conclusions.

"It was under the bed—it must be there—or did you take it down to the church?"

"No, I didn't, and if it is not here, it is not in this house—and I am absolutely without a gown."

"He sent his other to the heathen out in Kansas," whispered New England Helena to the Avenger.

"Absolutely," father's voice was rising. "The thief ought to be shot if it is stolen."

"Gee, I guess you'd better skedaddle—you stole it," counselled the Avenger, in low tones. "I'll boost yu' up onto de roof where he can't find yu. Golly, but he's cussin' mad—bet yer yu'll git an awful hidin' if he ketches yu'."

"You bet," whispered Sal irreverently. "Frederick, I am not going to church today—maybe I'll never go again. I am not going to Heaven if you don't," she added darkly, as hand in hand with the Avenger, she stole noiselessly toward the shed.

She boldly crawled up onto the shed roof, with the help of the woodpile and the Avenger, pulled off her shiny shoes and gave them a toss somewhere, clambered up to the main roof of the low-built house, finally gained the ridgepole and hitched herself along to the chimney. There she snuggled, quite hidden from sight by the gable over Bridget's room and the full-leafed maple tree that rubbed its branches restlessly on the slippery grey shingles. She was a trifle nervous at first, but still it was a mighty adventure, and she fairly chuckled to herself in her happiness. She could fancy the search downstairs, and father's irate face. He would have to go to church without a gown, or a child, and they had never gone to church without her before. There certainly would be exciting times when they found that she had disappeared, too. She did not care if they never found her. The Bloody Avenger would come for her, and they would go off together and be real pirates, and she would never go to church, so as to avoid all possible danger of going to Heaven minus the Avenger. Or perhaps they two would live together up on the roof, and never go down except at night for booty and things to eat, for it was such fun there up above the world so high, where she could catch glimpses of the long, Sunday-quiet street, through the swaying tree, and all the people going to church. Father had better go or he would be late, for he would never find the treasure without the parchment and that was safe hidden inside her own little dress. Why in the world didn't they go to church? They were actually calling her, and father sounded terribly cross; by listening with all her mind she could hear him say:

"I must go, Mary, gown or no gown—it is my duty. And the child will turn up around here somewhere."

Mother's reply the child could not hear at all, but presently she saw father hurrying out of the front gate alone, while mother went to the barn and the ravine and the well and then back to the shed, everywhere calling Helena, Helena. Bridget was searching too, and the Avenger was pretending to hunt—she wished he would look up and smile at her—but in a few minutes he ran out at the front gate and up the street toward the neighbors. Before long other people came to look for her, for the word had spread that a little child was lost—she could see old James Lyman, the darky-man, whom she had always thought was the devil, and Mr. Palmer, the man who never went to church at all. Once when a larger branch swung aside in the breeze Helena had a glimpse of mother holding in her hands the little, shiny black shoes that the child had thrown aside when she came up onto the roof—mother with a face so anxious and worn that she hardly knew it. Then Helena almost felt a pinch of conscience that mother should seem so sad, and yet if she were to climb down it would only be the same old, dreadful words that would greet her, “Oh, there you are. Well, run away now.” Besides, she loved the Avenger best anyhow. She rather wished it would get to be night; she was tired, for the minutes had lengthened into more than an hour, and she was desperately hungry and her leg ached with long sitting in a cramped position.

The people were beginning to come out of church now and every one else would be having dinner, though they weren't half so hungry as she was—and how her leg did ache.” From her glimpses of the world below she could realize that people were running about and making a great commotion in the quiet of the town. Father had come home and the hum of anxious voices came up to her, very faint and very confused. It was strange to feel that she was an object of attention to that interesting world down below; if only she were not quite so tired she would be so happy up there in the sky—mother cared for her while she was up there. The clang of the electric car coming into the barns away down the street reached her ears—she could have a checkered view of the people getting off; one of them was such a queer fat woman who waddled in the funniest way—but Oh, oh, oh, how her leg ached. Yet if she moved she would fall; she was sure of it; and on a sudden the ground below seemed so dreadfully far away that it made her sick to look down. Her head began to whirl and she cried out because of the pain in her cramped leg; she must move at any cost—if she could only get down! Dizzy and faint she tried to raise herself, shutting her eyes against the sickness that made everything rock beneath her. Then her ears filled with a singing, the world grew into a rolling, tumbling blackness, and a tiny white bundle slipped down from the saving arms of the great maple in a limp bundle upon the grass.

It seemed a dark eternity before she began to realize that she was very tired and that a loud, unknown voice was troubling her when she was trying so hard to rest. As she slowly opened her eyes, she saw in a flash mother, a new, beautiful mother, holding her close, father kneeling beside her, and at the foot of the bed that very same funny, fat woman whom she had seen coming down the street, years ago up on the roof. This queer woman was holding the Avenger by the scruff of his neck and it was she who was speaking so strangely, punctuating her remarks by shaking Frederick, whose lovely face bore an expression of displeasure in the supreme. Beautiful Sal closed her eyes wearily and the voice came to her as from far away.

"The divil that he is." The sperrets a' ben spakin' to me iver since he kim, but wid the washin' and all, I couldn't lave to come. It's home ye're goin. Now, on the nex' car, ye imp!" Yes mem, anythin' that's happened, it's all his doin', ye needn't tell me—an' ye might ha' knowed it from the beginin'. Come along wid ye, ye limb, and ye'll be doin' yer divlments to home after this, do ye mind?"

"No, don't you go!" cried Helena, pulling herself up, white with pain. "Don't you go and leave me all alone," she moaned, falling back. "It was all my fault. I took the gown, it's in the barn. He was good to me and I was all alone. Take me along and we'll be married and be pirates," she murmured weakly. Then, impatiently: "Mother is so busy—don't you go and leave me all alone, all alone."

Mother was crying with her face in the child's tumbled hair.

"Oh, Helena," she whispered, "I have been a wicked mother, but it is going to be different now—try to forgive your own mother. Arthur," she said to father, "Help me to make it right to her."

"We will help one another," he said gently. "May not Frederick stay a little longer?" he added to Mrs. Thomas O'Hooligan.

Portrait of a Tranquil Man

Translated from Pons.

He arises tranquilly
Breakfasts very reasonably,
In the Park walks frequently
Taking it unhurriedly,
Reads his paper carefully
When he has dined bountifully,
On his neighbor, Clidamy
Calls to gossip lengthily.
Home to supper leisurely,
Back in his apartments he Says his prayers devotedly,
Disrobes, never hastily,
Goes to bed all quietly,
Slumbers soon and that soundly:
Ah! poor Mr. Clemencie!

Ecstasy

(Translated from Victor Hugo.)

But the waves and the stars and the night were with me,
Not a cloud on high, never a sail on the sea.
Depths more deep than the facts of things showed to my eyes;
And the woods and the mountains, all nature in seeming
With murmurous mingling of questions was teeming.
For sea-waves, for flame of the skies,

And the golden stars, infinite legions that rang
With great harmonies, loud now, now soft as they sang
Were calling—whilst bending their fire-crowns to nod—
And the blue waves, which nothing can guide nor arrest
Were calling, a-tossing the foam from their crest,
“’Tis the Lord of us all, the Lord God!”

Milk Toast and Melancholy

Farce in Four Scenes

Characters

JOE ELLIS.....A young society man
RALPH ELLIS.....A Freshman and Joe's brother
HESSIE JALSTEAD.....A Junior and their cousin
DR. DROWNING.....A man of medicine

Scene I

Place: Baldwin Cottage. Joe is discovered sitting before the grate fire, reading a note. Enter Ralph.

Joe: I say, Ralph, look here. What do you think of such a business? You know the Junior girls are going to give a leap year party to show us fellows how it should be done. Well, here's my invitation.

(Reads) "My Dear Mr. Ellis: The Junior girls will give a leap year party to the men of the class, February sixth. I have heard it said that you were game. If you are, wear a red necktie on Tuesday. This will signify that you wish to accompany me. A carriage will call at your house the evening of the sixth, but it will be of no use to attempt to learn my identity in the meantime. Anne Onymous."

Ralph (laughing): Well I guess from what I can make out, that you are in for it. To wear a red necktie are you? Sounds like Conan Doyle. Where does Sherlock Holmes come in and discover the villain by deductions concerning the size of a man's thumb nail?

Joe (anxiously): Come on, Ralph. Cut it out. Don't laugh. What am I going to do about this? I don't know whether it is from someone I want to go with or not. How can I tell?—and besides I wanted to go with Nor—well, never mind that, I had a girl picked out.

Ralph (with usual Freshman suspicion): You don't think that it is a Sophomore stunt, do you? Like salting the rink and building that monument? They may be trying to play some joke on you. But here comes Hessie, maybe she can help you out.

(Enter Hessie smiling.)

Joe and Ralph (in unison): Look here, Hessie, what do you think of this? (Both try to read at once.)

Hessie (in despair): Let me take the note. (Reads.) Oh, yes, I see. It is an invitation to the Junior party. No name attached. A mystery, I see.

Well, the best thing for you to do is to accept the young lady's kind offer of carriage, flowers, etc., and go. Take my advice. A rolling stone is worth two in the bush.

Joe: I guess I'll have to accept, but just reflect whom it might have been.

Ralph: And then you will have to wear a red necktie! Awful! A man must be greatly impressed by a girl's handwriting to wear a red necktie for her sake.

Hessie: Is that the tie that binds? Awful. I should have expected that of John Kendrick Bangs, but of you, never.

Joe: I'm going home to think this over. (Exit Joe.)

Hessie and Ralph go out with bowed heads, singing softly, "Trouble, trouble, well I guess that's trouble." Curtain.

Scene II

Place: The same. One hour later. Ralph and Hessie are discovered in earnest conversation.

Hessie: Really, Ralph, I just did it on a dare. The girls said he would never accept and I really believe that he's going to now. Haven't you any plan?

Ralph (excitedly): Yes, an inspiration. We have Joe persuaded that he doesn't want to go already. Now, if we can get him an excuse not to go. I tell you, we'll get him to feign sickness, and then dose him up so he will really be sick. It won't hurt him. It will only make him feel foolish in the end.

Hessie: I see exactly. We'll tell him that he doesn't want to go with some strange girl and that the only way to get out of it is by being too sick to go. Then we'll fix him so that he can't go. That's your part, and finally I'll send him word that it was I who wanted him to go. It will be a good end to a good joke on Joe.

Ralph: Let's swear secrecy. (As they shake hands the curtain falls.)

Scene III

Place: Joe's room. Afternoon before party.

Ralph is busily engaged in giving horse medicine to Joe.

Dr. Drowning is present giving advice.

Doctor: That's it, Joe. Now you could deceive your best friend. No, don't lift that pillow. You ought to be too weak for that. There, that will do nicely. We'll fool them. But, remember, for three days with milk toast and melancholy. (Exit.)

Ralph (exultantly): That's the idea, old man. You look sick enough to fool Dean Miller. Now, I'll go down and tell how badly you feel and have some of the fellows come up, so that your illness will be noised about. Don't overdo it, though, and remember, milk toast and melancholy, and a little more talcum powder on your cheeks.

Joe: Well, 'all's well that ends well,' but I'm playing a desperate game.

(Ralph goes out and a little later the medicine begins to take full effect. Joe groans in agony, finally dropping on the bed writhing.)

Joe (miserably): Would that I never had permitted myself to be tortured like this! Better to have gone with any one. Oh, shades of Demosthenes, if I only had words to express my suffering! (Curtain.)

Scene IV

Place: The same. Time, nine o'clock, evening of the party. A messenger arrives, bringing a bunch of flowers and a note.

(Joe reads): "My dear Joe: I am sorry to have deceived you so, but it was the result of a bet and I couldn't lose. Just think, the stake was a box of DeKlyn's maple puffs. Please accept these flowers and my sincere hopes that you will be better by to-morrow.

Your little cousin, Hessie."

Joe (in anger): Of all the fools there is none like an old fool. All this pain and palaver, milk toast and melancholy, and then to find it all a joke. But I am game. I'll never let on I wasn't really sick. But I'll get even with Ralph and Hessie, if they are my own relatives. I'll bet Ralph was in the plot. Milk toast and melancholy, your grandmother.

(Curtain falls, leaving Joe tearing a scented blue note in fragments, regardless of the fact that he is stepping on a very pretty bouquet of carnations.

A May Song

Glad is the May time
When the winds are low,
When the violets grow,
And the orchards blow,
Glad is the May time
When the winds are low.

Never such a May time
Lavished so much bliss
On a world as this,
In a sunbeam's kiss,
Never such a May time
Lavished so much bliss!

The Lover's Spring

There is music in the woodland;
Gay and joyous on the air
Come the sounds and scents of Spring time,—
And the sun shines on her hair!

Oh, the earth is glad and gracious
And the heart can know no care,
For our life is made for loving,—
And the sun shines on her hair!

Compensation

Though to know what June is,
I must know
Weary months of storm and Driving snow,
I do not shrink from learning
All the pain
Of Winter, all the yearning, —
Tho' gray rain
Falls sadly where no sun is,
It is vain,
If I know what June is!

PETERS HALL

Hoch der Graf

THE GRAF, only at first, no one knew, he was a Graf, confided in Lorena. A confidante was as the breath of life to the Graf. It was not any serious drawback in his eyes to a confidante to be of the leaky sort. In fact he would probably have considered it a distinct misfortune to have unburdened himself to anyone without sieve-like propensities. A girl was the best and leakiest kind—a small girl, not by preference, but by necessity, for no grown up girl would ever listen. Boys were not worth while—they were very enthusiastic and admiring, but they rested under the mistaken impression that secrets were the better for keeping.

This was the trouble with Harold Mortimer Duncan. Harold and his mamma had arrived at the Point Pleasant hotel very early in the season so that Harold had had an unusually good opportunity for making first acquaintances. Harold's tastes were cosmopolitan and he had found Rudolph, the porter, very interesting and quite communicative, but not until Lorena came and superseded him did he even dream that Rudolph was a Graf in his own right, and although he did know there was a scar, he had not an idea about the killing.

Lorena was an ideal repository for the Graf's confidences. She had big sympathetic eyes, a most devouring love of excitement beyond the sphere of well brought up little girls of twelve summers, and she was possessed of a dramatic gift for story telling, which allowed the Graf's tales to lose none of the importance when they were repeated by her to the people on the hotel piazza. Within two days after her arrival she was on friendly terms with the Graf and inside of a week she had learned most of his history.

The crowning revelation came on the morning when Lorena sat on the stairs while Rudolph polished the brass railing. She patiently slipped down step by step as he descended at his cleaning and by the time they had reached the fifth step from the bottom most of the Graf's remaining secrets had been wrested from him. At the third step came the last and darkest disclosure and Lorena in her astonishment quite forgetting to keep her balance on the polished and slippery stair had slid off bumping uncomfortably to the floor. She speedily picked herself up before Rudolph could lay down his cloths and wipe his hands, and she fled unceremoniously to the piazza. With sparkling eyes and flushing cheeks she began a story which soon collected about her all the children in sight, including even the discomfited Harold.

"What do you suppose Rudolph really is?" she began. "You can't guess if you try a week, I know. Oh, of course, Harold, we all knew he used to be in the army, you can tell that from the way he walks and 'specially the way he takes off his cap, and anybody can see he's German, but what else do you suppose he used to be? You can't imagine! Well, he was a great deal more than just a common German soldier—he was an awful important officer. He was a Captain—just think of it—our Rudolph! And more than that, when he wasn't fighting he lived in a sort of a palace only it was called a Schloss, and he was called Graf Rudolph von Hohenwürfen. And when he was at home in the Schloss, he had dozens and hundreds of servants to do whatever he said—think of it, our porter that carries our trunks and blacks our shoes! I never expected to know a real, live nobleman, did you? I think it's a good deal to know one even if he is down in the world just now. And I feel awful sorry for him, don't you? Just suppose you had been Grafs once yourselves and now you had to be common porters. Rudolph says it is very hard for him to keep cool and rein in his noble spirit when the manager of this hotel tries to boss him around. Rudolph says he always feels in the direction of the sword which he used to wear, although now he has on only a porter's uniform instead of the Emperor's.

Why didn't he keep on wearing the Emperor's uniform and being a Captain? I'm telling you as fast as I can if you will just listen. You know about that scar on his arm—did you know he has a lots worse one on his collar bone, right near his heart? Your collar bone isn't near your heart, did you say Harold? Maybe yours isn't—maybe yours is different from other people's. Anyhow Rudolph said that's where it is and he ought to know. How do you suppose Rudolph got those two scars? Fighting? Well, of course—but it wasn't in any common kind of fighting. He got those scars in a duel!

You see it was this way. Rudolph and another officer both liked the same lady—ein liebliches Mädchen, Rudolph said she was—and the other officer took her to a dance in the barracks, that's where soldiers live when they are not at home. And Rudolph danced with the girl a lot of times and he gave her a rose and she smiled at him and put the rose in her hair and the other officer was awful jealous and he challenged Rudolph to fight a duel. It was too bad, because Rudolph says it's not his fault if the ladies like him. The other officer, the mad one you know, when he challenged Rudolph, said he wanted to fight because of the shape of Rudolph's nose—you see that was so the girl wouldn't feel bad about being the cause of the quarrel.

Well, Rudolph and the other officer fought with their sharp swords, and Rudolph got a wound that left the scar on his arm and the worse one that left the scar on his collar bone awful near his heart. You needn't laugh, Harold Duncan, maybe there are some things you can learn if you have studied physiologery. Rudolph said he was only too thankful that he didn't come off any worse, and I thought probably the other man didn't get hurt at all. So I asked Rudolph if the other officer didn't get even the least little scratch and what do you thing Rudolph said? He said, 'O, yes, Miss, he died.' I was so surprised that I tumbled right off the stairs but it didn't hurt me much and I came right out here to tell you. Look, there he goes now, carrying a pail of water and a broom, just as if he wasn't a Graf and hadn't fought a duel or killed a man or anything."

The excited audience watched with dilated eyes the shambling figure disappear around the corner. They knew they had seen how the stooped shoulders could straighten and the heels come together in a military salute upon fitting occasion. They had seen the scar below the rolled up sleeve; they understood now that what they had heard the manager grumbling at was not lazy disinclination to work in Rudolph, but the expression of a noble soul which could not be bowed in servility. During the next few days the children watched Rudolph at his work, with feelings of mingled joy and horror. Lorena learned many things to tell them of his hair breadth escape from Germany by night journeys, of his repulse at the hands of a weeping and inconsant Mädchen, who thought he was too fierce a lover for her, of one stolen visit back to see his aged parents, and of his unhappy fortunes in America. Although fitted for almost any position requiring intellect and a perfect command of several languages excluding the English, Rudolph said, that through partiality shown to less able men, and through jealousy of his cleverness and happy ways always with the Damen he had been uniformly ill-treated and unappreciated. At last he had sought to drown his sorrows temporarily in the flowing bowl, fully intending to drown them later in the flowing river. While in the helpless condition resulting from recourse to the first resort, an undiscerning policeman, who was no respecter of persons, had taken him to the police station. The next morning Rudolph, sobered and feeling once more the responsibility of life, had consented to hire his services to the worried manager of the Point Pleasant hotel. But it would not be for long, that Rudolph would stay to suffer the indignities heaped upon him by that very inferior person, Mr. Smithkins, the manager. Mr. Smithkins was growing daily more unbearable, the firms who were seeking Rudolph's services as travelling man, expert accountant, foreign buyer, were becoming importunate. Rudolph's blue blood was asserting itself more every day. Rudolph assured Lorena that almost any time the end might come; he, Rudolph, would disappear from the Point Pleasant horizon, an unappreciated star, and the hotel and Mr. Smithkins would be without a porter. For the sake of the few people in the hotel for whom Rudolph held any respect, he hoped that Mr. Smithkins would control himself, limit his demands, and thereby postpone the inconveniences which would arise from lack of a porter.

In answer to Lorena's earnest proffers of sympathy and a desire to be of service to the ill-treated nobleman, Rudolph took her entirely into his confidence. He told her that to conceal his identity from the German officials he had dropped his ancestral name and assumed that of Bäcker—plain Mr. Rudolph Bäcker. In the little town of Merryvale there was a kind family whose ancestors had served Rudolph's ancestors in the Schloss of Hohenwürfen. They had received Rudolph upon his first arrival in America, and their hearts and their home were always open to him. Indeed it was their humble name which he had assumed. If a crisis should come and he should go suddenly, he would like Lorena to take his mail and send it to Merryvale. Lorena promised gladly, and all the more gladly because of something which she meant to keep from Rudolph as a surprise. Lorena's Aunt Margaret lived in Merryvale and Lorena and her mamma were to make Aunt Margaret a visit when the summer was over and they were on their way back to New York. It would be great fun, Lorena thought, to make friends with the good Bäckers and perhaps even see Rudolph unexpectedly in Merryvale.

It was not long before Rudolph's gloomy forebodings were fulfilled. Something happened which his proud spirit could not brook. The cook's assistant was gone one day, and Mr. Smithkins asked Rudolph to kill some chickens. Rudolph's wrath fairly blazed as he told Lorena in a breathless moment afterwards. He, really Graf von Hohenwürfen, was asked to use his noble right hand wherewith he had been used to kill men, in cutting chickens' necks. Never would he so desecrate the great house of Hohenwürfen. Mr. Smithkins had ordered him to kill the chickens or lose his job. Of course, he had preferred to go. In fact, he was rather glad to be able to seek his good friends in Merryvale and rest before deciding which of his advantageous business offers to accept. Lorena and the other children watched him depart with sorrow, and their hearts were fired with indignation, when they heard the tyrannical Mr. Smithkins say to a boarder that it would be rather inconvenient for a day or two until a new porter could be found, but Rudolph's going was really not an unmixed evil. He was good for nothing, impudent and lazy and had stayed at work as long as he could be expected to without going off for a drunk, considering the circumstances under which he was picked up. There was no use in trying to tell grown people anything, however, they would just laugh.

When Lorena and her mamma reached Merryvale on their homeward journey, Lorena's curiosity and eagerness to see the Bäckers was not in the least abated. They were satisfied, however, very much more speedily than she had anticipated.

Aunt Margaret lived all alone in her big neat house, with only one servant, a capable, middle-aged German woman. Lorena's mamma, who was used to masculine protection, asked Aunt Margaret the very first night if she were not afraid sometimes, without a man in the house, of tramps and burglars. Aunt Margaret only laughed and said that she and Mary got on very well when they were alone, and were never troubled, except when Mary's worthless husband, Rudolph Bäcker turned up to ask for shelter and money from his much enduring wife. "You see," said Aunt Margaret, "although Rudolph is utterly useless and a thorough liar, Mary has a tender conscience and she always takes him in and cares for him after his drunken sprees, although each time she says she will never do it again. He is of no good about the house for he is quite too lazy to work, and he is altogether too timid to frighten away the mildest tramp. He is a ridiculous braggart and to hear him telling of what he can do any one would think him as brave as a lion, but he is actually afraid to touch anything as savage as an axe. Years ago he was trying to kill a chicken for the people he worked for, and during the operation, the axe head flew off grazing his collar bone and his arm, and since then he is even afraid to chop wood. Oh, Mary and I are perfectly satisfied in living without a man."

"Dear me," thought a certain little girl, "I needn't have thought I knew so much more than Harold after all, and how very disappointing about the duel and the Bäckers and the scars."

German Translations

Translation from Heine's Lieder

What means this lonely tear drop?
It blinds, I see but ill,
Remaining from ancient sorrows,
It dims my eyesight still.

It had many glittering sisters,
They all have melted away,
With all my joys and my sorrows,
In the night and the wind to stay.

Like mists are also melted
The little blue stars so mild,
That all those joys and those sorrows
Down into my heart had smiled.

Ah, my own love has perished,
Like an idle breath has passed!
Thou, ancient, lonely teardrop,
Thou, too, shouldst melt at last!

Translation from Uhland

"Frühlingsfeier."

Lovely, golden day of spring,
Fervent, joyous rapture!
If I e'er could sing, today
Should I the song not capture?

But wherefore at such a time
Is one work imposing?
Springtime is a solemn feast:
Let me pray, reposing!

A joke, it is a gentle thing
And hath a pleasing sound;
We pity those who feel a sting
Where'er they may be found.
For only they who're worth the while
Have all their foibles shown.
Who wouldn't furnish many a smile
Whereby they're famed and known?

Scraps from "Hi-O-Hi" Joke Books

A TECHNICAL QUESTION.

Arthur Danforth, '07, to Con. girl: "Say, which is more advanced, Junior Con. or Junior Cad?"

A FINE DISTINCTION.

Mussey, '07: "People here speak so differently from the way they do where I come from."

The other: "Where do you come from?"

Mussey: "Elyria."

Harding, '04: "I begin to wish I had invested a couple of dollars in a skating ticket."

Bellows, '05: "So do I. It's cost us about three plunks apiece already."

Frank Van Cleef, '04: "Cornstarch is adolescent, isn't it?"

Paul Warren, '06, coming home several times and finding his match safe repeatedly emptied places a sign above the same: "Take a match and light out."

EXPERT TESTIMONY.

"To judge from appearances to kiss her would be like eating a marshmallow."

Harry Shurtz: "Huh, 'twould be worse than that; I'd just about as soon put my head in a flour barrel."

UNTIMELY ADVISE.

Tom Jay to Alexander Dick: "Hello, Dick! Did you go twice to the debate last night?"

Dick: "Of course I did."

Jay: "You're a fool—you don't catch me taking a girl to anything intellectual."

Sid Bellows tells Win Fauver that Jim Scroggie has moved out into God's own country. On being asked where that was he replied "Down by Siddals."

Miss Gleason to Miss McDaniels, '05: "Haven't you got your joke-book full yet? I should think it would be. Mr. Alderfer boards at your house, doesn't he?"

TABLE TALK.

Miss Luce to Joe Ellis on Washington's Birthday—"What are you going to do this afternoon, Mr. Ellis?"

Reply: "Study."

Miss Luce: "That sounds more proper than natural."

There is a young girl named Sylvester
Who always sleeps late for to rest her.
Her teachers do hate
To have her always late,
And she sure is a sad patience tester.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., Nov. 10, 1903.

Dear Sir:

I am sorry, but you will have to omit any letter from me this time. Lay this up against your predecessor, to whom I was thoughtless enough to write several personal letters that were afterwards used against me in the public print. Really, the only thing I have learned since April 29, 1903, is: "Put not your faith in Annual Boards, for they will print any manuscript that falls into their hands; neither confide in the judgment of feminine editors, lest they snare you and make you look foolish.

Yours sympathetically,

LUCIEN T. WARNER, '98.

Mrs. Johnston: "Where did the crusades embark?"

Miss Rose: "At some sea-port."

Mrs. Johnston: "Yes, probably. Miss Jones, where did they embark?"

Miss Jones: "On the eastern coast of France."

Mrs. Johnston: "Where is the eastern coast of France?"

Miss Jones: "North of Spain." Miss Jones resumes her seat.

Mrs. Johnston: "Your recitation was a myth and a delusion."

A SENIOR'S CONCOCTION.

Sophomore: collusions.
Junior: delusions.
Senior: solutions.
Alumni: allusions.

TERRIBLE.

Prof. Anderegg (in toast at Phi Delta love feast, June, 1903): "I very often solve difficult problems in my mind during chapel service."

Freshman: "Did you take Gubelman in German?"

Miss Hall, '06: "No, I had William Tell last year."

NOT SO BAD.

Win Fauver, being reprovved for urging Jim Stimson to study on Sunday, defends himself by saying: "Well, it's only pulling an ox out of the pit on the Sabbath day; that's no great crime."

A SUGGESTION FOR A WINDOW IN THE NEW CHAPEL.

Senior Boys Blue

With apologies to Eugene Field

I.

The little red carts are covered with dust,
The wheel-barrow's leg is gone,
The little toy pistol is red with rust
And the tops remain still unspun;
Time was when the little red carts were new,
As they lay in the locker bare
That was the time when the Senior boys blue,
Kissed them and hid them there.

II.

"Now don't you go 'til we come," they said,
"And don't you make any noise,"
And toddling off to their classes then,
They dreamed of the pretty toys;
But while they were dreaming an angel hand
Reached down for the carts so new;
O the days were many, the days were long,
But the little toy friends were true.

III.

Ay, faithful to Senior boys blue they stand
Under stove-pipe and screen and case,
Awaiting the touch of each little hand,
The smile of each childish face;
And they wonder, as waiting the long days thro',
In the dust of that attic bare,
What has become of the Senior boys blue,
Since they kissed them and hid them there.

Here and There

AT DILL FIELD.

Overheard at a game just after the fall elections.

Number I: "Well, Tammany came out ahead this time."

Number II: "That so? Who did they play?"

Turn backward, turn backward, O Freshman stunts,
The first one is buried, the last one grunts.

POLITENESS.

Miss Luce: "Mr. Taylor, are you going to hear 'Everyman?'"

Mr. Taylor: "Beg pardon, what man is that, did you say?"

AT MUSICAL UNION REHEARSAL.

Professor Andrews: "Will you please hurry and sit down, Mr. Lightner, so that the ladies can get their minds on their singing!"

McCloskey: "I was standing on the lower steps at Peters and another fool came along and knocked my feet out from under me."

HONESTY.

Harry Shurtz (to his confidential associates): "Honestly, fellows, I am coming to think of the girls altogether too much."

IN THE GYM.

Win Fauver (conducting gym. class): "Keep your ears back of your head!"

Chaffee, '06, dashes into the gym. and giving Eaton, who is tying his shoe-string, a resounding slap, shouts, "Hot hand." Eaton quickly straightens up, proving to be Dean Miller. Exit Chaffee.

McDaniels, '06: "Kuyper, you ought to do field day work in the weight events."

Kuyper, '06: "Yes, it seems as though I ought to be able to do something with the hammer throw, I've done carpenter work all my life."

APPEARANCES ARE DECEITFUL.

Eric Anderson is sick. Frank Clark unsuspectingly carries a basket containing books to Anderson's room. "Andy," very hungry and pleased at thoughts of relief, opens the basket and finds two bound volumes of the "Literary Digest."

Olive Sieben to Bob Patterson (who has a loose button on his coat): "You need a house-wife."

"Well," he replies, "'tis leap year."

AT THE O. S. U. DEBATE.

First Con. Girl: "Where's the Oberlin team?"

Second Con. Girl: "Those kids on this side of the stage will speak for Oberlin."

In Ewing's Bible class Tom King remarks that "there is some difference between a son of God and a Republican."

In the Class Room

Professor Martin expresses his approval of Miss Gehman's sight translation by the remark, "Good eye."

Mr. Bates asks Blythe, '04, a question in class and Blythe replies.

Mr. Bates (pointedly): "Miss ———, can you give me a rational answer to that question?"

Professor MacLennan: "The naked savage carries with him an image wrapped up in his jacket."

Miss Barrows (in Freshman English): "The children chased the chickens in their Sunday clothes."

Prof. Cowdery (finding aimer spelt amer): "They used to say that love was blind, but we want an i in it nowadays."

Mrs. Johnston (describing mediaeval castles): "The height of the wall was the same at the top and the bottom."

Miss Wiederstrom translates: "——retombait sur ses quatres roues comme un tigre sur ses quatres griffes," fell back on its four wheels like a tiger on four giraffes."

Prof. Hall (in a Tuesday morning class): "I am very sorry that I can't return your test papers this morning, but we had company over Sunday."

Prof. Cowdery: "Whose wife was it that was turned into a pillar of salt?"

Miss Parmalee: "Saul's."

Prof. Cowdery (commenting on "vous pouvez attendre un lion"): "Yes, you can touch the heart of a lion, providing you don't touch its stomach first."

Prof. Cowdery: "What do you call the front end of a vessel?"

Miss Gordon: "The aft."

Prof. MacLennan, discoursing in psychology on delirium tremens, says: "I once had a friend" (slight hesitation) "who investigated such a case." (Sigh of relief from the class.)

Translation in Freshman Greek: "And down from a peg he hung, a clear voiced lyre (liar)."

Professor Cowdery (explaining agreement of past participle): "Two people have kissed each other. There must have been agreement in that case."

Mr. Lord in Latin class requests that all deficiencies be handed in before the next term as the class will then have Terence. Mr. Kidd to a classmate: "I don't see the use of changing teachers. I would rather have Mr. Lord."

Mrs. Johnston: "If I could only teach you one thing in this history course I could die happy—sit up straight in your seats, he who sits on the small of his back is sunk to low estate."

SOME OF OUR FACULTY MEMBERS.

Scrubby

I went into the special-car as hopeful as could be,
They give the managers all seats but hadn't room for me.
They sent me back to class-rooms, and that's all the fun I got,
But when it comes to workin',—Mike! they need me on the spot.

For it's Scrubby this an' Scrubby that, an' Scrubby's all to blame,
But it's "Hi-O-Hi" for Scrubby, the day before the game,
The day before the game, my men, the day before the game.

We aren't no grandstand heroes, nor we aren't no lobsters too,
But workers for the golden O, remarkable like you—
And if sometimes our temper isn't all your fancy paints,
Why, workers for the golden O don't act like plaster saints.

For it's Scrubby this, an' Scrubby that, an' anything you choose,
But 'Varsity will tell you, it's the Scrubs that win or lose,
The Scrubs that win or lose, my men, the Scrubs that win or lose!

The Lost Chord

Prof. Andrews each day at the organ
Sits weary and ill at ease,
And his fingers wander gently
Over the ancient keys.

They know not what he is playing,
Nor what he is dreaming then,
But they madly rush for the doorway
Nor wait for the last Amen.

It comes with a far, faint sweetness,
The music solemn and slow,
Nigh drowned by the noise and bustle
Of those making ready to go.

We have sought, but we seek it vainly,
That one last chord to hear,
But still are we ever baffled
And never the notes come clear.

It may be in the new chapel
Quiet will reign again,
It may be only in heaven
We shall hear that last Amen.

Caught on the Fly

KEENNESS OF PERCEPTION.

S. R. Campbell, '04 (in literary society critique): "Mr. Brown is popular with the boys and a regular mascot with the girls."

Opliger, '06 (speaking in favor of decorating the society rooms): "If only we had a few old Phi Deltians and graduates hung around our walls, it would be such an inspiration to us!"

IN THE STACK ROOM.

Overheard in the library: "Well, I'd have you know that I'm not a story-book girl."

Miss Turner (in conversation): "These two young people were suddenly wafted into eternity by the cow catcher of a locomotive."

Out-of-town visitor on day of O. S. U. debate: "Who was that enthusiastic little fellow who spoke so well in chapel?"

(Harry Shurtz had addressed the students.)

THE REFORMER.

We've an auburn haired Sophomore named Smith,
Who thinks his remarks full of pith,
But he talks prohibition
Without intermission,
So it's no snap to listen to Smith.

DITTO.

Night of October 3rd, 1903, (Earnest Allison Smith, '06, to a bunch of Freshmen who ask him to sing for them): "I tell you that I want you to understand that we don't have this sort of thing in Oberlin any more."

TABLE TALK.

Miss Turner, '04 (to F—d M—s—r): "The time we witnessed the performance of 'Everyman' the few persons who were there seemed almost lost, so great was the magnitude of the auditorium."

After a request at Baldwin for those desirous of having a skating party to hold up their hands, Joe Ellis remarks: "Skating parties are hold-ups from start to finish, anyway."

There is a footballist named Jim,
Whose chance for a wife is not slim,
He looks up from his plate,
A girl smiles sure as fate,
For children and puppies love him.

RATHER EMOTIONAL.

Professor Cowdery (at the entrance of several tardy students): "We lament our late friends, but suppose they were not dead, but sleeping."

A GOOD RECOMMENDATION.

Bayle, '05: "Professor Martin could make even the Old Testament interesting."

RATHER DISCOURAGING.

Miss Irwin (Con.) after first football game: "Aren't you awfully tired?"

Bartholomew: "I should say I am."

Miss Irwin: "You had better go home, then."

WHEREIN SID. BELLOWS DOTH APPEAR.

I know a young man named Sid,
Who's a strangely obedient kid.
He once broke a rule
'Most got fired from school—
And now he does just as he's bid.

Freshman (hearing Sid yell on night of Upperclassmen-Freshmen scrap): "Parson, O parson, there's nearly twenty fellows getting together down there; hadn't we better sneak out the fire escape?"

Prof. MacLennan (signing card for Introduction to Philosophy Course): "Bellows, if you flunk this course I'll break your neck."

Prof. Hall (to Mr. Bellows): "From whom were these people descended?"

Bellows: "Their ancestors."

Sid. (arranging his course for second semester): "I wish I could remember whether I have ever had that Economic History Course under Bogart."

Sid Bellows, hearing someone speak of Forbes-Robertson's Hamlet being in Cleveland, asks if the report is true that Washington Irving is to be there soon and says that if he is he believes he will go down.

MODERN HISTORY.

Sturgis (giving an oration in society on "Genius"): "Genius is the infinite capacity for taking pains."

Bissell remarks afterward: "Sturgis' genius consists in an infinite capacity for giving pains."

MAKING PREPARATIONS.

Rena Holmes, '05 (trying to get some condensed milk): "Have you any cold cream for spreads?"

Dr. Leonard (to applicant for physical training class): "Have you had appendicitis?"

Reply: "I don't know, sir. Is it required?"

WHAT IS THE MORAL?

Professor Jewett, assisting a couple of girls set up some apparatus, gives each one something to hold. Straightway Vincent comes running over and asks: "Can't I hold something, too?"

Whereupon Prof. Jewett replies: "Yes, hold your tongue."

Bones

A Ballad

Turn, gentle student of naught-two,
And guide your hopeful way
To where yon bright lights cheer the view
With hospitable ray.

For once forlorn and lost you led
With fainting steps and slow
To wilds immeasurably spread
And fraught with saddest woe.

"Forbear, my son," the prudent cried,
"To tempt the dangerous gloom,
For by yon prof. you'll be espied
And lured unto your doom."

But now to houseless man and maid
The door is open still.
When farewells after tea are said
They pace here with good will.

Around in sympathetic mirth
Her tricks fair Jessie tries,
The smiles of all Art. Barrows stirreth,
While Ike to jesting flies.

And now when crowds retire
To work at home a bit
Full many let the muse inspire,
In Spear all love to sit.

Alas! the joys that talking brings
Are many and delight,
And he who still to study clings
—May study all the night.

But what is study but a name,
A talk that lulls to sleep—
A shade that follows wealth or fame
And leaves the wretch to weep?

And work is still an emptier sound,
The modern fair one's jest,
In Spear unseen or only found
In some who know not rest.

No never from this hour I'll miss
An evening's walk to Spear,
There, there to talk in blithest bliss
With all who care to hear!

Wise and Otherwise

A RIGID RULE.

Professor Jewett is not allowed to let SO_3 come in contact with the air here in Oberlin—because it smokes.

THANK YOU.

Freshman Girl: "Well, I've perscribed for an Annual."

IN MEDIAEVAL HISTORY.

Mrs. Johnston: "What have you read, Mr. Warren?"

Paul Warren (slowly rising): "Why, I read along the lines of to-day's topics."

Mrs. Johnston: "Very well, Mr. Warren, tell us something that you have read."

Paul: "I don't know as I can tell anything that hasn't been mentioned."

Mrs. Johnston: "That's all right; tell it again—we'd be glad to hear it."

Paul: "Well—I—I—don't know as I quite remember,"—and forthwith he sat down.

IN PETERS COURT.

Stranger to J. R. Ellis: "Have you charge of the prohibition interests in Oberlin?"

Ellis (doubtfully): "Why, Dean Miller has charge of all the prohibition in Oberlin I know anything about."

A LESSON IN APPRECIATION.

Miss Ruth ——— (hearing a part of the eighth Symphony of Beethoven being played in the next room): "I wish they'd stop playing that 'Mr. Dooley' all the time."

Prof. Bogart (addressing Dick, '05): "You remember the Civil War, don't you?"

N. B.

Prof. Bogart: "Because they are valuable and hard to obtain is not the only reason why men buy diamonds."

Lynds Jones: "A short definition for a bird is 'a feathered creature.'"

Mr. Mosher, can you think of any other creatures with feathers?"

Freddie: "Angels."

HE DIDN'T HAVE THE PRICE.

Grove Patterson (talking confidentially): "I did form a great liking for large people last year."

Some months later Grove approaches a member of the Board and asks at what figure he could buy off the publication of this statement.

WE'LL DO THAT.

Hammond (speaking in society concerning the St. Louis Exposition grounds): "We must notice the colossal size of this in that it is so large."

The Complaint of the Dendrologist

When you're studying Dendrologie
It is hard to bear people's glee,
For they watch you in crowds
As you look towards the clouds,
When your thoughts are, in truth up a tree.

They take you of course for a chump—
To excess in conclusions they jump.
They indulge in broad grins,
When your tree most chagrins;
Just as if you were not up a stump.

The Geologist and the Select Picnic

The geologist ne'er has to bone,
To delight in excursions, he's prone.
At these picnics 'tis said
That when he wants bread
He ne'er e'en by chance gets a stone.

The Ornithologist

Ornithologists rise with the lark
And go groping about in the dark
"Spotting" birds by their songs
Telling which song belongs
With the colors of day time. Now hark!

To Seaburn Eaton

Why goest weekly from our midst away?
Is't that thy brains do need some rest apart?
Or can it be, thou goest out to storm
The citadel of some fair maiden's heart?

Wentest thou off with somewhat less of haste
And frequency, the brain excuse would do.
But such religious method doth portend
A pilgrimage to her whose love thou'll sue.

Choice Bits

IN THE DEAN'S OFFICE.

Miss Currier (to new student): "How are you classed?"

New Student: "I don't know."

Miss Currier: "Well, are you in college?"

Rejoinder: "No."

And again: "In the conservatory?"

Reply: "No. I guess I'm in the Academy."

Miss Currier: "Well, how are you classed there?"

New Student: "I don't know."

Miss Currier: "Well, what Bible do you have?"

New Student: "Revised Version."

DIED GAME.

Miss Luce (drawing conclusions concerning "Richard III"): "In fact, Richard III died game."

Mrs. Johnston: "Miss Jones, what does 'simony' mean?"

Miss Jones, '06 (rather apologetically): "Getting married twice."

SQUIBS FROM THE REVIEW OFFICE.

Harvey Peck reads from an exchange: "A window once ate its jam, it then got a pane in its side, and for relief, loosened its sash."

Grove Patterson comments on it as "a sill-y joke." He succeeded in making matters right only by setting up doughnuts for the crowd.

E. A. Smith, '06 (on his return from the Prohibition oratorical contest, telling of the speakers and their subjects): "The man from Delaware spoke on the 'Task of a Century.'"

Grove Patterson, '05: "Did you say 'Cask of a Century?'"

In a clipping from a Syracuse paper, sent to the editor of the Review, at the end of a long, laudatory article on President King's visit to that city, appeared the liner "add.": "Drink Bartel's Beer."

DAHL'S LATEST OPINION OF CO-EDUCATION.

Dahl B. Cooper, '03: "It's a good thing if taken moderately. One slop-over "case" is sufficient warning against the one extreme and the social misfit should be a negative guide post to the other extreme."

IN THE CLASSROOM.

Oh, wheels of time, turn on!

You turn so very slow—

I wish the time would come

For us to rise and go.

AFTER THE RECITAL.

After Miss Fisher's Piano Recital a group of people were offering congratulations when Burke and one of his lady friends came up. Says Burke (absent-mindedly): "We were just waiting to be congratulated."

The Equine Mystery*

MR. SLY—A detective.

MR. SIGH—A poet and idealist:

A rabble of students and citizens.

Scene—Rustic Retreat in Arboretum.

Time—Day after Thanksgiving.

Scene opens with Mr. Sly and students languidly disposed about beneath the trees.

MR. SLY—Didst say he was of more than mortal height?

FIRST STUDENT—Ne'er saw I man whose topmost parts
Did so woo heaven. As we do say
In metaphor of poets that they go
About with heads among the clouds, so may
We truly speak of him. It is as if
An Atlas held the sky, so high he looms.

MR. SLY—And thou—canst add aught to the stature of this man?

SECOND STUDENT—

Ay, would I if I could. I saw him oft,
And each time, so it seemed, he was more tall
Than last. "Now 'pears he highest," I exclaim
And yet looking away and back, then must
I say the same—"He's tallest now."
Till quite at loss for words to scale those heights
I have evolved this certain formula—
Ne'er looked he taller than he always does.
We call him Slat—euphonious epithet!

MR. SLY—Then Slat was tall?

STUDENTS (together)—So have we said! Most tall, sir.

MR. SLY—How came an horse to play such havoc there
Upon his goodly countenance?

STUDENTS—Quite so! How came he? Tell it us. (Murmuring among students.)

FIRST STUDENT—No horse could reach those dizzy heights.

SECOND STUDENT—

Report has it 'twas gunpowder that did
So blur the pristine beauty of Slat's face.

(Shouts and turmoil. Cries of "'Twas powder;" "Nay,'twas the horse!")

* A fragment of a drama of which the first three acts have been lost. Doubtless the characterisation of the hero, Mr. Bell Syddows, which is worked out in the lost portion, is a strong portraiture. The accident which marks the climax of the drama so damage Mr. Syddows' physiognomy that he is an unfit object for the stage through the remainder of the action. The argument of this precious fragment has to do with the unravelling of the mysterious causes of the accident. Of these Mr. Syddows himself is in doubt. Some say it was a horse, others a cannon cracker. In Mr. Sly the detective, we have a poetical rendition of Sherlock Holmes. It is only through the divine alchemy of the poet artist that such incidents as the frightful demolition of a man's countenance can be idealized and made felicitous.—EDITOR.

A brawl ensues between the partisans of the horse and the gunpowder faction. This is quelled by the appearance of the Poet, dishevelled.)

POET—Gentle, my lords! Gramercy cease discord.
List to my lay more musical and forward.
The unimaginative soul is blind
To subtle truth. This mystery is clear
To my more blessed sight and far behind
Thy naked facts doth the vision appear.
A fable* of old time banisheth doubt—
New insight have we into Slaters' rout.
'Twas not an equine but a bovine hurt—
Mercurial cow in meteoric flight
Encompassing her orbit o'er the moon
Seared the young beauty of his face so soon
Disfiguring his physiognomy quite.
(Students slink away.)

Curtain.

Joe's Complaint

I've travelled this country all over,
Of girls I have seen not a few,
And many there have been that ravished
Even my critical view.
From the girl who is sweeter with learning
To the frivolous one who makes fudge,
Though some are all that's enchanting—
I consider that I am a judge—
One thing in vain I have sought for,
With longing, with tears and with sighs,
But still is the hope but a phantom—
A girl with violet eyes!

Many long years have I sought for
This vision my soul would so prize,
'Mong the blues and the browns and the others,
The girl with violet eyes!

*The fable in which appears the classic line "The cow jumped over the moon."

Hi-O-Hi Jokes

SEARCH FOR KNOWLEDGE.

Siegler (on first day at Talcott): "Must a fellow come to breakfast?"

Dean Lightner (in chemistry class): "If you breathe nitrogen it won't do you any particular harm, but it will suffocate you."

Mrs. Johnston (in Mediaeval History class): "Can't we sing this morning?" Mr. Metcalf, won't you lead the singing?"

ON THE GLEE CLUB TRIP.

The Glee Club are going to the west side of Chicago on the elevated. Conductor calls out "Halstead Street." Conkey kept on the car only by strenuous efforts.

A HAPPY THOUGHT.

Is it not possible that Prof. Caskey's farm is the nucleus of a future agriculture college?

AT THE ART EXHIBIT.

'07 to '06 (viewing the "Santa Barbara"): "There is a picture of Mrs. Peters. You know, they keep it hung up in Peters Hall."

HOW THE FRESHIE DOES IT.

A verdant Freshman at the Senior-Freshmen party approaches Senior girl and says: "Say, Miss ———, what's your name—I've forgotten it—I want to do the right thing by you, and if you haven't got company home, I'd like to help you out."

Miss Fette (speaking in Y. W. C. A.) "Some years ago when I was smaller than I am now—oh, no, I mean when I was younger than I am now."

SPEAKING FOR HIMSELF.

R. W. Paterson, '04, to McDonald, Cad: "Well, Mac, what are you going to do after this year?"

Mac: "Well, I don't know and I don't much care; I'm rather a wanderer, anyhow."

Pat (very dreamily): "No, Mac. I don't feel that way about it. I long for a little home and sincerely desire to look into the little face across the table,—that's my ideal. That's what makes life worth living."

MacDonald: "Then for heaven's sake, Bob, hang up a looking glass." (Exit hastily.)

UP IN PHI KAPPA PL.

Nissen, '04: "In a large city of 800-1000 inhabitants——"

The friends of one Soph, speaking dearly
Invariably call him "nearly."
His name it is Thompson;
The question that swamps one
Is why he is nicknamed so queerly.

Frank Van Cleef—The man with the auburn hair and absent looks.

Kent Van Cleef—The man with the absent hair and auburn looks.

Mrs. Johnston (after Olmstead had failed to answer a question):
"You're not a Junior, are you, Mr. Olmstead?"

Olmstead: "No."

Mrs. Johnston: "Surely not a Senior?"

Olmstead (timidly): "No; I'm only a Sophomore."

Mrs. Johnston: "O, well, in that case you're excusable."

SO IT IS TOLD.

Dr. Siddal, meeting Harry Shurtz one Sunday afternoon, relates to him the sad story of the Cad students who appropriated a country woman's horse and buggy and went driving. Harry looks up with that Sunday-school expression with which we are all so familiar and remarks innocently: "Why, I shouldn't have thought that any one could do such a thing on Sunday."

IN ECONOMICS.

Prof. Bogart: "Are customs duties elastic or inelastic?"

Metcalf: "Yes, in a way."

Professor Bogart: "Would you call sugar, molasses, beer, tobacco, and that sort of thing necessities?"

H. T. Simmons: "O, yes, sir."

Wolfe, '05: "All fluctuations are up or down."

Prof. Bogart (opening lesson in Economics): "Please approach the subject without any ideas."

Prof. Bogart: "Has society more capital than it needs at present?"

Harris: "Well, I haven't."

OUR PUNSTER.

Patterson, '05 (looking over the dinner table at Talcott): "None but the brave can eat the fare."

Miss Potter (a visitor at Talcott): "Why don't they allow dancing in Oberlin?"

Miss Fisher: "They're afraid we will wear out our soles."

Grove Patterson: "Yes, Oberlin's always stood for the preservation of souls."

Grove Patterson (speaking of the Baldwin dining room): "I thought that they got up by bells there—and sat down by belles, too."

THE JUNIOR MOTHER GOOSE PARTY

Junior Philosophy

My Senior year,
 There is so much that I will do
 To blot out faults that now I rue
 With many a tear.
 I'll never cut, but always go
 Where'er the streams of knowledge flow—
 Oh, virtuous conduct will I show!
 My Senior year.

My Senior year,
 The profs shall never mark me down,
 No cause will I give them for frown,
 Nor need to fear.
 My recitations shall express
 The lofty aims that I'll profess,
 No one past flunks shall ever guess,—
 My Senior year.

My Senior year,
 I'll go to chapel every day,
 Nor turn my thoughts from church away
 With carping sneer;
 But good resolves I'll make anew
 And have the sins that now I rue;
 There is so much that I will do,—
 My Senior year.

The Naughty Five Gang

There's a Gadarene gang, don't you know,
That thinks it's the whole giddy show.
They break every rule,
Pretty average cool,
And they advertise it and crow.

This naughty five gang boasts on Slats,
Who went out every evening on bats,
He, with help, blew his face
To ethereal space,
And wore it patched up, just like Pat's.

When Sir Joe, that gallant young knight,
Was protecting two girls by his might,
A toy snaklet wiggled,
The girls simply giggled,
But the bold Sir took refuge in flight.

There comes a Senior named Shurtz,
Said the girls were all terrible flirts.
"They're as easy as sin,
I can garner them in,
But letting them go is what hurts."

A solemn faced fellow named John,
At a party of Juniors, not Con,
Exclaimed "O! good heavens,
I must have Miss Evans,"
So they sent him her bill later on.

For his leap-year girl, Ike so demure,
The waiting just couldn't endure.
You see, it was Jess,
She was late more or less,
So he met her half way, to be sure.

Junior Class of Oberlin College Celebrates in a Unique Manner.

Special Dispatch to the Leader.

OBERLIN, O., March 18.—One of the greatest celebrations held here in years was participated in by the members of the junior class of Oberlin College this evening.

Dressed in fantastic Indian costumes, brandishing tomahawks, and preceded by a number of students on horseback, nearly 100 members of the class paraded through the town and visited the different dormitories. An Indian band added much to the occasion with its music. During the evening there was a display of fireworks, and demonstrations were made in front of Talcot Hall and Baldwin Cottage.

The celebration was primarily in honor of the success of the junior class' annual.

TO GEORGE REUBEN BROWN.

When George Brown was chairman of the committee appointed to remodel Phi Delta Hall, he wrote to Professor Anderegg among other Alumni members of the society soliciting his aid. In reply he received the following letter:

Berne, Suisse, Feb. 3, '04.

My Dear Mr. Brown:—

When a man is getting deeper into debt every day he would perhaps be justified in disregarding such appeals as yours; but your note contains an element of flattery so adroitly put that I surrender and make a modest contribution. Some one of your teachers must have succeeded better with you than I in mathematics.

Sincerely yours,

F. ANDEREGG.

The church bell tolls the hour of chapel time,
The tired students hasten o'er the lea,
The teachers fail to heed the calling chime
And leave the church and restful pews to me.

For why should they lay by the dusty tomes,
This place of helpful inspiration seek,
Leave the warm precincts of their cheerful homes
And go to chapel more than once a week?

IN DEBATE.

Cleverdon, '05 (debating upon municipal ownership): "We Oberlin people can sit back upon our clean streets—and—"

Lester Taylor (in the heat of debate): "I've not time to give you figures for this, but its so anyhow."

Wilmot (to the judges emphatically): "This was true in every single case with only one or two exceptions."

Prizes

The prize of twenty-five dollars for the best college song was awarded to Alfred M. Wilber, Con.

The prize of ten dollars for the best story was awarded to Ruth Mosher, '04.

The prize of ten dollars for the best full page art drawing was awarded to Jeanne F. Payne, Art.

The prize of five dollars for the best heading was awarded to Helen G. Thorne, Art.

The prize of five dollars for the best collection of jokes was awarded to Paul C. Warren.

For these prizes we are indebted to our friends, President H. C. King, Hon. T. E. Burton, Cleveland; Paul D. Cravath, New York; James Pettit, of Chicago; Professor F. F. Jewett; and Professor A. M. Abbott.

A.B. CHASE PIANOS

Oberlin, Ohio, April 27, 1904.

The A. B. CHASE Piano has always been a favorite in the Oberlin Conservatory of Music, has stood the test admirably, and has fulfilled all the requirements of a first class piano.

I have always recommended them to our students, and shall be glad to do so again.

J. T. Henderson, President Oberlin Business College

The Experience of a Young Man Showing the Benefits of a Business Training for College Men and Women.

Not many years ago a graduate of one of the best colleges of Ohio went to Chicago to seek employment with one of the large enterprises of that city. He made personal application at many places, but was always met with questions like these: "What can you do?" "Can you write shorthand?" "Do you operate a typewriter?" "Do you understand bookkeeping?" On answering these questions in the negative he was invariably told that they could not make use of his services. The young man saw the logic of the situation and came to the Oberlin Business College for a business training. While his college education was desirable and would eventually have been of great value to him, he needed a business training in addition to his college training, as every young man and woman does. Such training will cut in two the time necessary to go from the bottom to the top, and it means a salary two or three times as large as can be earned by teaching; and, besides, a business career is one of the most respectable and influential.

There is no Better Place to Secure a Business Training than in the Oberlin Business College.

Its courses are equal to any of the large schools of the East. Its teaching is unsurpassed in any similar school. Its equipment is all that might be desired. While some schools have a wider reputation, none has a better one. Over 300 students enrolled this year.

ALUMNI PIN

For some years there has been a demand for a distinctively Oberlin Alumni emblem, which would distinguish at sight any graduate son or daughter of the large and widely scattered Oberlin family. This desire has finally been crystallized into the form of a pin as shown below, which combines the historic and artistic features of the old Oberlin coat-of-arms with the name and motto of the college. The cut below is an excellent representation in size and color, but in the pin itself the coat-of-arms stands out in bold relief. The entire pin is of solid gold with border and shield of hard enamel, and it is supplied with a patent safety catch. No class numerals appear on the front, but the name and class are to be engraved on the back.

I am not much given to badges of any kind, but the Alumni Pin designed by Mr. Carruthers, following the general lines of the old Oberlin coat-of-arms, seems to me artistically designed and well carried out. It makes a very tasteful pin and a most appropriate symbol of the unity of the Oberlin Alumni and has its own contribution to make, I doubt not, to that unity.

HENRY CHURCHILL KING.

A Few Comments About the Pin May be of Interest

The Oberlin Alumni Pin seems to combine in an unusual degree, historical, associative and æsthetic fitness.

Alice H. LUCE.

The Alumni Pin designed by Mr. Carruthers seems to me to combine most happily three things dear to every Oberlin graduate—our suggestive motto, our beautiful colors and our euphonious name.

A. A. F. JOHNSTON.

It is a pleasing idea to work up the seal of John Friedrich Oberlin into a college pin. On the whole I think the plan has been successfully carried out.

A. A. WRIGHT.

The Oberlin Alumni Pin is an attractive memento of college life. I like both the idea and the manner in which it has been carried out in the pin.

E. A. MILLER, Dean.

I think the idea in the Oberlin Alumni Pin has been very successfully carried out.

C. W. MORRISON.

Symbols often emphasize ideals. The Alumni Pin which in its design so attractively suggests John Frederick Oberlin may very well help to perpetuate the spirit of his life among the alumni of the college that bears his name.

EDWARD I. BOSWORTH.

I have met Oberlin Alumni in all ends of the earth. How many I have missed because there was no Alumni Pin I shall never know. Without a pin we form a secret society which is contrary to rule.

G. FREDERICK WRIGHT.

The new Alumni Pins please me greatly and I feel sure that the members of the class of 1904 will all wish to secure pins when they see how handsome they are.

GEORGE M. JONES.

I approve of the plan of having an Alumni Pin and think the historic combination peculiarly appropriate.

Mock Republican Convention in 1900

IN accordance with a custom that had its origin more than forty years ago, the students of Oberlin College held their Tenth Mock National Republican Convention in the old College Chapel Monday and Tuesday evenings, June 14th and 15th, 1900.

What a host of memories that occasion recalls! The weeks of busy, anxious preparation we will pass and come to the first night. Everything was patterned after a real National Convention so that there was little difficulty for the imagination to work up a scene that very closely resembled a genuine political battle at a great party convention. Seats had been reserved for all of the nine hundred delegates, each State delegation's place on the floor being indicated by large placards. The delegates marched in with emblems and banners expressive of the peculiarities of their State and rooted for their favored sons in real earnest. Kentucky came in dressed as mountaineers, with guns and bottles; Massachusetts had a live rooster; California a string of oranges and a bear; Minnesota a badger; Wisconsin a beer keg suspended over their heads; Pennsylvania brought a miniature oil well derrick; Texas a silver star. The Philipino came under his great hat in almost native costume. From every State and Territory, from Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, Guam and the Philippines came the representatives of the people with fife, drums and yells, and all kinds of political deals arranged to boom their favored candidate.

The great party leaders were there. Hanna and Dick from Ohio, Odell and Platt from New York, Quay of Pennsylvania, Beveridge of Indiana, Burrows of Michigan, Lodge of Massachusetts, Henderson of Iowa, Davis of Minnesota and Reed of Maine.

Amid the confusion, with great difficulty the National Chairman called the convention to order and introduced Judge D. J. Nye of Elyria as temporary chairman, who, upon taking the chair, made an eloquent speech reviewing the glorious history of the Republican party. While the committees were out preparing their reports the great questions of the day were discussed by able speakers. The first to secure the floor proceeded to unburden his heart by presenting a resolution that the boys and girls of Oberlin be allowed to go walking together on Sunday.

One gentleman declared that he had come all the way from North Carolina expressly and by freight to protest against polygamy. A member from Kentucky spoke for the abolition of the tax on whisky and its levy on tea, coffee, soda water and other harmful beverages. These weighty discussions were mixed with the more serious questions of the tariff, sound money, expansion and reciprocity.

The report on permanent organization was next adopted, making A. G. Reynolds of Painesville, Speaker of the Ohio House of Representatives, permanent chairman. Judge Reynolds delivered a ringing speech which would have done credit to any convention.

The committee on rules and order of business and credentials next reported, recommending that delegates from Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippines be not seated. This was adopted after a fierce debate.

The platform was next read and discussed. This afforded a splendid occasion for oratory and the opportunity was in no wise neglected. Rare eloquence, sound logic, keen wit and biting sarcasm flowed freely. The platform having been adopted, section by section the convention adjourned until the following evening.

On Tuesday evening so great was the crowd, eager to witness the closing scenes of the convention, that it was with difficulty that seats could be reserved for the delegates. The din and confusion of the night before reigned supreme, but when Chairman Reynolds brought down his gavel in a few potential raps order was restored and the business of the convention resumed.

The chair announced that nominations for President were in order and directed the roll of States to be called. A gentleman from South Carolina, in a splendid speech, placed in nomination Theodore Roosevelt. Ohio responded with the name of McKinley, and when the speaker closed his oration the band played and the convention literally went up into the air. Thomas B. Reed was next nominated and seconded by a western delegate, who said he wanted to see a man nominated who had made his mark and whom "Mark" had not made. The nomination of Mrs. George Dewey took the convention by storm, but Chairman Reynolds, upon objection being made, ruled her out on the ground that according to the Constitution nobody can be President unless thirty-five years of age, and no woman ever arrives at that age without proof. Nominations having closed, balloting began. No choice having been made on the first ballot, a second was ordered, when the Chairman of the New York delegation arose and read a telegram from Governor Roosevelt forbidding the use of his name for either President or Vice-President. The withdrawal of Roosevelt broke the opposition and McKinley received seven hundred and sixty-three votes on the second ballot. On motion his nomination was made unanimous.

For Vice-President the following names were presented: Jonathan P. Dollivar of Iowa, Cornelius N. Bliss of New York, Mayor Fauver of Oberlin, C. K. Davis of Minnesota, Elihu Root of New York, John D. Long of Massachusetts and Edward O. Wolcott of Colorado. The contest for Vice-President promised to be very lively on account of the number presented and the vehemence with which each candidate was supported, but through the quiet manipulation of his managers, to the surprise of everybody, Jonathan P. Dollivar stampeded the convention and won on the second ballot.

At midnight the result of the Convention was telegraphed to the successful candidates, who in due course of time fittingly responded.

Thus closed one of the memorable events of 1900.

Chairman Mock National Republican Convention of 1900.

and ACTUAL BUSINESS methods are employed. Our plan of INDIVIDUAL instruction enables the student to do more and better work in a certain time than by the old class plan. It also permits the student to enroll at any time, and finish the work as rapidly as is consistent with good work.

Every Graduate is at Present Employed and calls for stenographers and bookkeepers are frequently refused because no one is ready for the position. Many of the best and largest firms are employing from TWO to TWELVE of our graduates. Enroll with us, and we will soon train you for a first-class position. The following letters will show you what business men think of our graduates and school:

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with the method of instruction given by the Elyria Business College Company, and take pleasure in stating that their course of instruction is very thorough and complete. The fact that we have in our employ FOUR of their graduates who are giving entire satisfaction, speaks more for our opinion of this school than we could tell in volumes. I have no hesitancy in saying that any young person desiring a good business education can do no better than to place themselves in this school under the care of Miss Johnston, as President.

Very truly,
(Signed) W. C. LEMASTER, Cashier,
The Elyria Savings & Banking Co.

The following letter will be of interest to teachers who desire to increase their salaries. Eight teachers have already enrolled, and by joining us at once you should be ready for one of these positions by September 1st.

MISS JOHNSTON:—

The greatly increased demand for teachers of shorthand and commercial branches in Business Colleges and High Schools far exceeds the supply. It seems to me that there was never a better opportunity for public school teachers to seek promotions. Can you do something to interest at least some of these teachers in the work that is taking first place in the schools of to day?

I must depend upon the best Business Colleges in different sections of the country to aid me in supplying this demand. ANY NUMBER of good teachers YOU may be able to provide will be greatly appreciated.

Wishing your school the increased success which it deserves, I am,

Very respectfully, JAMES S. CURRY,
Representative of Day's Shorthand Manual.

We will be pleased to furnish copies of other letters upon application from those interested in preparing themselves for a place in the business world. Write or call for information. Visitors always welcome.

"Some railroads run fast trains, sacrificing comfort, others run comfortable trains, sacrificing speed, but the trains of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway are both speedy and comfortable. Its daily Twentieth Century Limited between America's premier cities, New York and Chicago, has set a standard which has been neither surpassed nor equaled. Day after day, in fair weather or foul, this marvelous combination of American ingenuity and mechanical skill performs its appointed task in only twenty hours. Not only is the roadbed of the

Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway

The finest in the world, but its operating equipment, sleeping, parlor and dining cars are the best of their respective kinds. Its connections with the Boston & Albany and New York Central offer excellent facilities for passengers from New England and the Middle States who desire to travel over its lines. That the Lake Shore's service is the best is amply verified by the fact that the greater portion of the passenger traffic between New York and Chicago is carried on its lines."

McKellogg Clothing Co.

No. 9 South Main St., OBERLIN, O.

We are showing the most complete line of stylish, up-to-date clothing ever shown in Oberlin. Our line embraces the Stein-Bloch "Smart Clothing" of Rochester, N. Y., the David Adler's Sons & Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., and the Henry J. Broch & Co., of Buffalo, N. Y.

Our aim is to buy only the best goods on the market and to sell them on a very small margin, within the reach of all. In connection with our immense stock of clothing we also carry a very large assortment of men's fine shoes and are sole agents for the world renowned W. L. Douglas shoes, the best shoes made for men. They range in price from $2.50 to $5.00.

And always on hand a large assortment of men's furnishings.

IT'S NICELY DONE

There is nothing which so detracts from a man's appearance as bummy looking linen.

He may have every other article of wearing apparel perfect, but, if his linen is badly laundered, it spoils the effect of the whole.

It makes him look just as cheap as though he wore a rubber or celluloid collar.

C. L. Sentz, one of your fellow students, is agent for our laundry, one of the oldest and best equipped in N. W. Ohio. You make no mistake when you give him your work.

The P. Gs.

AND there are also P. Gs.; P. Gs. of various kinds, seventeen in number and representing six colleges; P. Gs. of different degrees of celibacy, ranging from the celibacy conspicuous by its absence in the case of "Scout" Adams and "Tommy" Tompkins, to the ever present single mindedness of "Pete" Zeller of '99. Some of these advanced students have withdrawn from society merely for the good of their work, as is the case with "Pete," Win Fauver and Ed. Moore.

Then there are the two whose lives have been embittered by hard experience, Charles Burr and John Ebenezer Wirkler. The case of the latter is especially touching. Born in the little town of Newton, Kansas, of sturdy Scotch-Irish parentage, he commenced life in the noisy, homely way in which he has brought it to his present twenty-nine years. At first he spoke only his guttural mother tongue, but becoming fired with a desire to learn English and history, he set sail for the East, shook his spinnakle boom to the breeze and came on apace in a box car on the Steubenville system, landed in Oberlin, and has realized his fondest hopes and bitterest forebodings. Becoming enamoured of the talented "Schwester" of Columbus and vicinity, he declared his feelings only to learn that "Sis" formerly had vowed to wed none but an Englishman.

Alas! Alack! for Irish Jack,
He now must trace a single track.
And while he flies the green flag still
The Union Jack will take his Jill.

Miss Adams and Miss Mabel Jones of 1903 especially requested that their weaknesses be not dwelt upon, promising to buy two Annuals apiece if this request were granted. Exit weaknesses, enter $4.

The following quotation from Ben Jonson does not refer apparently to any particular graduate student, perhaps not to the class in general. It is a figure.

There was once a terrible Φ . g.
Who rode on a little tin g. g.
To a civilized college,
Was stuffed full of knowledge,
But now he is only a P. G.

THE FORTY-FOURTH ANNUAL SESSION OPENS

Wednesday, September 21, 1904

The standard of requirements high. Thorough graded course of instruction covering a period of four years. Laboratories are equipped for individual and class work in

HISTOLOGY, EMBRYOLOGY, COMPARATIVE
ANATOMY, CHEMISTRY, PHYSIOLOGY, BACTERIOLOGY and PATHOLOGY.

The ample clinical facilities have been very materially increased by the addition of the extra-mural clinics.

This school affords special advantages from the fact that the teachers give individual attention to the students. It is co-educational.

GROWTH IN WISDOM

All of the 1904 Seniors had their class portraits made by Bateham.

Members of the Faculty almost invariably refuse to go elsewhere for their portraits.

It costs a little more to be portrayed at your best, but isn't it worth while?

New Home of The Spencerian, Euclid Avenue

IN all the years that the Spencerian has been training young men and women for business, it has never offered such advantages in buildings, furnishings, equipment, courses of study and teaching force as at the present time.

The Following Are Some of the Superior Advantages Offered

New Buildings, erected for the exclusive use of the school on an ideal site, corner of Euclid avenue and Huntington street. New school furniture of the latest and best designs; an abundance of light and fresh air; one hundred new typewriters selected from the standard makes of the world; an office practice and banking department that rivals many banking houses; a model office equipped with labor-saving devices; modern courses of study and expert teaching force.

An army of young men and women have attended the Spencerian since it was founded in 1848. It has continually an excess of applications for clerks, bookkeepers, stenographers, etc. We assist young men to positions where they can work for their board while attending school.

The Spencerian offers you an opportunity to start life fully prepared to do the work that brings the largest returns. We shall be pleased to explain fully about the many opportunities that are open to young men.

Start ^{your} annual Right

Remember in preparing your College Annual, that you and your classmates will keep the book in remembrance of your college days, for all the rest of your lives. Do you want your class book to be a good one? Of course you do.—Then start right by deciding to have the best of illustrations, which means the best cuts,—half-tones, zinc etchings and color plates.

We make the cut problem easy for you to solve. First our quality is the best. The illustrations in this and a large number of the other annuals of this year are our work, and speak for themselves. We will gladly send further samples.

Our large experience with College Annuals enables us to handle your work with intelligence and dispatch. We will be glad to give you information of any kind about preparing your book,—such as grouping photos, methods of making drawings for reproduction, kinds of photos that reproduce best, etc. Glad to suggest ideas for obtaining new effects, etc. By giving us the order for your engraving, you are assured,
